By MICHAEL EVANS DEFENCE CORRESPONDENT

THE George Cross has been awarded for the first time for 11 years to an army bomb disposal officer who tried to defuse a six-tube mortar device in a van parked near a hospital in Londonderry in October last year.

Warrant Officer (1) Barry Johnson, aged 38, of the Royal Army Ordnance Corps, said they had been given nave used remoter controlled equipment. He decided, however, that this would have posed too great a risk as one of the mortars could have been launched.

WO1 Johnson, aware of the danger to civilian lives, decided to remove the bombs from their firing tubes and dismantle them by hand. With the help of an assistant, the firing tubes were carefully moved from the back of the vehicle and placed on the ground. As the next stage was extremely hazardous, he sent his assistant back behind cover and continued the disarming procedure alone. While dismantling the last bomb, it exploded, causing serious injury to his face and legs. He was blinded by the fragments and thrown across the road by the blast. Although in great pain, he refused to be evacuated until he had briefed his assistant so the operation could be safely completed.

WHAT is wrong with this sentence? "A burly white man bought some fried chicken and was gyped by a glamorous waitress." By pronouncing these words, you have committed no fewer than four offences of racism and three of sexism, according to the can-Most of the words in that sentence ons of America's new language police. have been proscribed in a glossary issued by the journalism school at the University of Missouri, Journalists and writers should avoid them, it said "in order to avoid offending and perpetuating stereotypes". The Missouri glossary has provided an easy target for those who believe that American English is being sapped by a new plague of euphemisms. For a start, "burly" is "an adjective men, implying ignorance", the glos-sary says. Fried chicken is "a loaded phrase when used carelessly" because it is often used to refer to the cuisine of black people. To "gyp" someone is to insult gypsies, just as to "go Dutch" is to insult citizens of The Netherlands, it says. A novice at the art of detecting sexist thought crime would know that "glamorous waitress" is taboo, but even if you had called your "server" a "dear" person, that would have been out since dear is "a term of endearment objectionable" to some women. The exclamation "Ugh!" is "highly offensive" in any context because it denotes the stereotype of the American Indian.

Among the doctrines of the politically correct now spreading outward from America's academic world, it is

"white" to refer to the species the police define as caucasians. This mirrors the move away from "black" by people who prefer the expressions "African American". Instead of white, you are now advised to say "non-African-American" or "non-American-Indian". At the worst, "European-American" is acceptable. Just as the term "white" is held to carry too much resonance of the "racist power structure" that founded and runs the US, so "man" implies sexism. Feminists are reluctant to use the term, preferring "male". Lest anyone imagine this usage is restricted to the loonier reaches of academia, the lead editorial in The New York Times yesterday referred to the need to train

"male adults" as teachers. Few American journalists now dare

irst campaign walkabout in dismissed from the cabinet, he was surrounded not by his supporters but by those who regard him and his party as traitors to the ideal of a free and unified Ireland.

Thousands turned out to greet the former deputy prime minister on O'Connell Street, one of Dublin's main of Sinn Fein and the antiextradition committee ringed him in a tight circle, chanting republican slogans and demanding the release of Dessie Ellis, a republican hunger striker facing extradition

That confrontation tactic has been deliberately planned by Ellis's supporters, who are taking maximum political advantage of the coincidence of the hunger strike with the presidential election. Thursday will provide another opportunity for the campaign when Ellis, who by then will be on his thirtieth day without food in Portlaoise top security jail in Co Kildare, will appear at the Supreme Court in Dublin to hear his final appeal against extradition.

Ellis, aged 37, a former television technician from Finglas, in north Dublin, is determined to make that court appearance, whatever the state of his bealth. So far, according to his supporters, he has lost over two stone in weight. They say, however, as

WHEN Brian Lenihan, the do his family who come from a long republican tradition didate in tomorrow's Irish and have been vociferous in presidential election, made his their support for Ellis, that he remains as determined as ever Dublin last week after being to fast to the death to avoid what he believes will be an unfair trial in Britain leading to a certain life sentence. If the Supreme Court finds in favour of extradition, which lawyers believe it is likely to do, Ellis's sister Martha says he will take a short cut to an agonising

Ellis has a long and complicated criminal history, which has included spells in custody in America, where he was a fugitive, deportation back to Ireland, and an eightyear sentence on explosives charges connected to offences in the republic, which he has just completed in Portlaoise.

He is wanted by Scotland Yard on charges alleging he possessed explosives and conspired to cause explosions in Britain between 1981 and 1983, including the explosion at Cheisea Army barracks which killed two people. The Ellis case has attracted wide interest on both sides of the Irish Sea because it is the first to be dealt with in the republic under the new 1987 Extradition Act, based on the European convention on the suppression of terrorism which makes extradition automatic for most "terrorism"

related offences. It was during Ellis's High Court appeal in July that the essence of the case against him was revealed. A Scotland Yard detective said 13 sets of his fingerprints were believed to have been found on items in an IRA arms cache found at Pangbourne in Berkshire in October 1983. It was that cache which police allege was linked to the bomb attacks in London. Ellis has claimed that he could not have had anything to do with the bombing campaign because he was in jail either in the United States or the Irish Republic at the time the alleged offences were on to the stock the stock the structure to the structure to be a structure to the structure of the structure to be a structure to be structure.

to save his political skin"... Mr Kilroy-Silk, a Labour MP from 1974 to 1986, had, in writing about the controversy over Mr Rushdie's novel The Saturic Verses, alleged that some MPs, including Mr Sedgemore, had called for the law of blasphemy to be extended to cover all religious faiths, not just Christianity, Mr Kilroy-Silk had asked how some MPs had suddenly found censorship so attractive, and had written: "It could not possibly be, could it, that their conversion has anything at all to do with electoral calculation?". Mr Garnier said that the questioning was rhetorical and intended to supply its own answer. Mr Sedgemore, in evidence, said that he was "a civil libertarian with an anarchistic streak". An amendment he had signed to a Commons motion had stated that it sought a debate about the alternatives of reform or abolition of the blasphemy law. Mr Garnier said that Mr Kilroy-

Rolls, sitting with Lords Justices Nounce and Russell, said the patients had not annoyed their neighbours.

In appealing against the High Court ruling, the health department argued that the use of the houses at Charlcombe Park did not breach the stipulation that they had to be used as private homes. That was challenged by the devel-opers, C and G homes, a subsidiary of the Cheltenham and Gloucester building society, which had thought the homes were to be used for doctors' residences. The court was told that the patients had a resident house eader who was a registered nurse and two support workers went in daily. "If a label can be attached to such use, it seems to me to be that of 'hospital amnexe' or 'mental health hostel'," Lord Donaldson said. "Praiseworthy though this no doubt is, I have to say that in my judgment this is not a use which would be regarded as a normal use of a private dwelling house."

Six of the petients, who were discharged from Mendip Hospital, Wells, which is being closed, moved to the estate last April, and another moved in more recently. They were allowed to remain in the homes pending the appeal. Only seven of the 22 properties on the estate have been munity-orientated services for sold but the local estate agents people with a mental illness."

THE council of the National voted is seen as an indication council to ignore the express wishes of those who voted for the ban, it would be de-nounced as undemocratic and for bowing to pressure from the field sports lobby. Within the last decade the trust has enjoyed unprecedented status and success, and has more than doubled membership. Yesterday, however, it received several resignations in protest at the antihunting vote, which it fears could become a flood. The council is unlikely to seek a compromise whereby it would agree to ban hunting over sites of special scientific interest and places that attract a lot of visitors. That might be the only way of avoiding a confrontation with hunt supporters, including many of the trust's own tenant farmers. Roly Ford, joint master of the Quantock Staghounds, said yesterday that, if the council ratified the vote, the hunt would be destroyed and 70 staghounds condemned to die. "I am not bluffing," he said. "You can come and see

Sentence of crash driver tripled

AN EIGHT-month jail sentence on a motorist who caused a crash in which a teenage girl passenger died in a blazing car was increased to two years yesterday.

Court of Appeal judges ruled that the original sentence on Roy Francis Lambert, aged 41, a hotelier, who had been drinking, was unduly lenient. They also doubled his two-year driving ban. Lambert, of Uffculme, Devon, would have been freed from Dorchester prison on November 23 but for yesterday's successful application by the Attorney-general to have the sentence increased. Siddharta Mukherjee, aged 51, an orthopaedic consultant, of Hartlepool, was jailed for a year, with six months suspended, after pleading guilty yesterday to causing the death by reckless driving of a woman aged 20. Mukherjee, who gave a urine/alcohol test result of 123 against the legal limit of 107 after the incident last December, was also banned from driving for five £2,000 in fines and costs by Teesside crown court.

Marsh had strong motive, jury told

THE former world boxing If Mr Marsh lost, he would champion Terry Marsh had a have to admit that what he powerful motive to want to kill Frank Warren, his manager, the Central Criminal Court was told yesterday.

Ann Curnow, for the prosecution, said that at the time that Mr Warren was shot Mr Marsh was facing the end of his career and the possibil-ity of a humiliating defeat in a libel wrangle with the boxing promoter.

Mr Warren, aged 38, was shot as he arrived for a boxing promotion at the Broadway theatre in Barking, east London, on November 30 last year. Miss Curnow, in her closing speech at the trial of Mr Marsh, said that he would have been in a position to know that Mr Warren attended all his boxing promotions.

She said that the Crown's contention was that the shooting was a planned assassination attempt, and added: "The question is not who the gunman was, but has the prosecution proved to the correct standard it was Terry Marsh?"

had said was a "dreadful lie" Miss Curnow said. "For a man in Marsh's position that would be a very great humiliation." She added: "The Crown's case is that Terry Marsh had a powerful motive to wish to dispose of Frank Warren."

Richard Ferguson, QC, for the defence, described the prosecution case as a clever illusion and said not one of its witnesses had "laid a glove" on Mr Marsh. Miss Curnow had strung together ideas sprinkling her speech with occasional references to the evidence, and ended up by creating an impression that case against Terry Marsh. He said that Mr Warren had been in the best position to say whether Mr Marsh was the gunman, but had been unable to do so. "The position is there is no evidence. Not one witness has come forward to identify Terry Marsh as being the gunman."

Brontë devotees clash over parsonage plan in 1893, has submitted plan-

A PLAN to extend the former parsonage home of the Bronte family in Haworth, West Yorkshire, has sparked a passionate debate

among devotees. The Bronte Society, which owns the property, says that the £1.25 million extension, which would be larger than the original house, is desper-ately needed to cope with the number of visitors and to provide better facilities. Opthe proposed extension as monstrous and hideous.

More than 200,000 people from across the world visit the Brontés' former home each year. Charlotte wrote of the parsonage: 'My home is humble and unattractive to strangers, but to me it contains what I shall find nowhere else in the world."

That appeal has made the parsonage museum the second most visited literary shrine in England, after Shakespeare's former home in Stratford-unon-Avon, and its very popularity is putting space." The society, founded worldwide, said: "You can never please everybody. Some people are so passionate about the Brontes that they don't want anything to bappen to change the building as it was in their time. "Some people would even like us to demolish an 1870s extension, built after the Brontes left, even though it is part of the listed building. It just can't be done."

He added: "With some 200,000 visitors a year, there is tremendous pressure on the house. We need more

ning permission to Bradford city council and has also applied for listed building

It wants to demolish an extension built in 1960, which serves as offices and tourist shop, and build a much larger one linked to the parsonage by a glass passageway, which would provide space for a new museum, shop, offices, storconference room.

The council said yesterday that it was approaching a number of organisations, including the Victorian Society, the Georgian Group, English Heritage, the Royal Commission on Historical Monuments in England, the Council for British Archaeology and the Ancient Monuments Society, to ask their opinion before the application goes before the nning committee.

In 1980, Bradford council launched a strategy to improve the image and economic fortunes of the city, with a package called "In the footsteps of the Brontes". A decade later, that industry is worth more than £56 million a year, and attracts more than 6 million visitors annually. At last count, there were more than 50 businesses in the town linked to the Brontes.

To some, the commercialisation of Haworth and the Brontes has already gone too far, and the proposal to build a new extens parsonage is the final straw. Robert Barnard, a society member and author, is one objector. He said yesterday: "It is a hideous extension, a Norman fortress totally out of scale with the parsonage." Mr Steed said yesterday that the proposed extension would be joined to part of the house that was added after the departure of the Brontès in 1861. The decision to adopt the plans had been taken unanimously by the council of the society in the summer, he said,

Lobbyists urge EC to show horse sense

By Shella GUNN, POLITICAL REPORTER

MORE than 60 years ago an English-woman was so appalled by the sight of old work horses from Britain stumbling on to the docks of Antwerp that she set up a charity to save them.

The campaign begun by Ada Cole and her International League for the Protection of Horses led to a scheme effectively to ban the export of live horses and ponies destined for continental tables. As well as saving horses from the trauma of a Channel crossing at the end of their working lives, the scheme protects Britain's unique breeds of mountain and moorland ponies. Ray MacSharry, the EC agriculture the state of the well and the state of the s commissioner, insists that the scheme is abolished after 1992 in the interests of free trade and harmonising Community rules. Opposition to Mr MacSharry's attempts to revive the trade accounts for more than half of the letters sent each week to the agriculture ministry and rural MPs. The Princess Royal and the scenes for a derogation with more vocal support coming from leading equestrian figures including the commentator Peter O'Sullevan and three-day eventers Ginny Leng and Lucinda Green.

In spite of the strength of support, David Maclean, the junior agriculture minister, sees little chance of getting a special derogation to save the scheme, given the EC's pursuit of harmonisation. Since a final decision does not need support from all member states, the government cannot by itself stop the commission abolishing the scheme.

"The commission discovered that our minimum values legislation serves no other logical purpose than a clever ruse to stop horses being exported live then slaughtered for food," Mr Maclean said. "It is a good ruse and we have to admit it flies against the principle of free trade. But we are saying it is not harming anyone economically other than ourselves and we are prepared to put up with that been shocked by the level of lobbying."

Queen Mother are lobbying behind the economic loss to secure greater animal welfare." The minimum values scheme under the 1981 Animal Health Act stops the export of live horses under a certain value, so making it uneconomic to ship live horses for slaughter but preserves the trade in riding and breeding horses. minimum values range from a ban on exporting a heavy draught horse worth less than £715 to protecting Shetland ponies worth less than £145. The commission takes the view that Britain has a protectionist regime in horses.

Lobbying of MEPs by animal welfare groups led to the European parliament supporting Britain's case, but it was rejected by the commission. Lobbyists have taken the campaign to the Continent by rallying other member states to their cause. Mr Maclean said: "I am grateful to the British horse interests in taking the arguments over to Brussels because that is where it must be conducted now. The commission has

However, according to the Law Society, proposed criteria for allocating cases are too loosely worded and could lead to every case being transferred

The society said that the criteria, to be applied by justices' cierks, would include a test of exceptional complexity, importance or gravity, and added: "When will a case involving significant harm to a child not be important or grave?" As a result, the criteria would provoke needless litieation about which cases should be sent to which judicial forum, the society said.

British Telecom announces fewer faulty lines than ever.

In 1987, 4.3% of telephone calls in this country were failing to connect. Today, that figure is down to 0.7% and it's still improving. In fact, whichever way you look at it, British Telecom's customer service is improving. Walk out onto the street and you might notice the absence of broken payphones. That's because, at any one time, 96% of public payphones are in perfect working order. As recently as December 1987, the figure was as low as 72%. Try calling directory enquiries. Only two years ago, you had a one in four chance of finding our operators engaged. Happily, you now have only a one in twelve chance. Our repair performance is dramatically better. Nine out of ten faults are now cleared within a working day. And 95% of new lines are now installed by the date agreed with the customer. Of course, there's still work to be done. With telephone lines running the length and breadth of the country, carrying 80 million calls a day, the odd line is inevitably soing to develon a day, we've been rapidly modernising our 7,000 local exchanges. Indeed, 70% of our twenty-five million customers are now being served by a modernised exchange. Which means you'll also be enjoying clearer lines and quicker connections. Naturally, this all costs money. Last year alone, improving and expanding our services cost us over $3 billion. Details of exactly how we're investing this money are contained in our latest Quality of Service Report. To obtain a copy, please call us free anytime on 0800-800 882. We think you'll agree we're on the right lines.

Charles Newbold, managing director of Thomson, in Budapest for the Association raise the price of next year's of British Travel Agents' convention, said that prices in brochures to be issued after Christmas would not rise by more than "I or 2 per cent".

"The vast majority of other operators will need to increase their prices by between 5 and 10 per cent just to keep pace with the increased costs," he said. "If they don't, they may be tempted to drop any no-surcharge guarantees and claw That would be deceiving the public on a massive scale and would drag the whole industry back into the mire."

Harry Goodman, chairman of ILG, which in the year to October made record profits of £46 million, was equally unsympathetic to less well-placed rivals, "We are certainly not going to increase our prices in order to protect those who were either too stupid or short-sighted enough not to buy their fuel in advance," he said.

Already many smaller com-panies are seeking ways of guarantees by using measure including a flat-rate £7.50 "insurance charge", that would give a guarantee against price increases. However, with the market leaders holding prices steady, there will be extreme pressure on other operators, and fears are growwall if the financial problems continue for another six months or so.

 Air travellers face increases in fares of up to 8 per cent from mid-December as airincreased fuel costs. The International Air Transport Association (lata) announced the rise yesterday. It is thought that British airlines flying to committing the offence while holding a public office was immediate.

Trust ports face clash over sell-off schemes

By MICHAEL DYNES, TRANSPORT CORRESPONDENT

AMBITIOUS plans to pri-vatise the trust ports, the 100 or so state-owned port facil-ities that handle more than a third of Britain's imports and exports, will be unveiled in the Queen's Speech

The scheme has been denounced by opponents as the tail-end of the government's privatisation programme, al-though supporters insist the the pathfinder for a new era local community

Many of the trust ports, which include Dover, the Port of London Authority, the Medway, Hull, Tyne, Mulford Haven, Aberdeen and Ipswich, were estab-lished by Victorian merchant adventurers to regulate har-bour trade. Now they co-exist with the private-sector ports in the British Ports Federation, such as Manchester, Liverpool and Felixstowe, and the munici-pal ports such as Bristol and

Unlike the private-sector ports are unable to use their asset base to borrow money to finance revitalisation schemes, including indus-trial, leisure and retail developments, because their assets belong to the state.

After the abolition of the National Dock Labour Scheme last year, the trust ports of Clyde and of Tees and Hartlepool put themselves in the vanguard of the privatisation initiative by submitting their own privatisation bills. Both bills are now before the House of Lords and could receive royal assent in the new year.

The new trust ports bill will take the form of enabling legislation, allowing trust ports to take the private route without the need for partiamentary approval for individual privatisations. The government hopes that the success of the Clyde and the Tees and Hartlepool bills will encourage the other trust ports to follow their example. The value of all the trust

Heady hopes for radical reformer anticipating his judgment day

ROY Hattersley, a politician for whom self-doubt is as foreign as taciturnity, des-cribes himself as radical by instinct as well as intellectual conviction. Judgment day for the reformer seems to be approaching fast

If 1991 opens as darkly for the Tories as 1990 is closing. the bookmakers will soon start tipping the writer, socialist ideologue and deputy Labour leader as the next home secretary. For a man who has always rated landing the best suite at the Home Office's headquarters second only to occupying 10 Downing Street, it is a heady

The shadow home secretary also freely accepts, however, that a Labour election victory would spell an end to the years of talking for himself and his party. The challenge, he says, would be to restore full public confidence in the police and the legal system, and implement legislation that could earn him the reputation of being the most progressive home secretary since Roy Jenkins who, in a two-year burst of reformism in the 1960s, legalised homosexuality hetween consenting adults and abolished corporal punishment in jails. Mr Hattersley's agenda includes the introduction of a freedom of in-formation bill, establishing parliamentary scrutiny of MI5 and MI6, the repeal of the Prevention of Terrorism Act and the creation of a tribunal to investigate suspected miscarriages of justice. Of these measures, the last is expected to meet the most resistance, aithough Mr Hattersley does not expect Whitehall to exactly glow with anticipation at the pros-pect of more open govern-ment, "I am expecting a few arguments, particularly with the judiciary."

He was deeply shocked by the quashing of the convictions of the Guildford Four and believes that a sweeping change in the way in which the court system deals with alleged miscarriages of ius-

would mean end to talking tice could be justified on that case alone. Action is also needed, however, because such legal scandals have done more than anything else over the past 20 years to undermine the standing of Labour would create a tribunal comprising legal and lay experts which would be empowered to review alleged wrongful convictions, If, after an enquiry, it considered that the complaints were well founded, the tribunal could either urge the home secretary to order a retrial or conduct a thorough review itself.

The Appeal Court, which is unlikely to be enamoured with the plan, would be limited to hearing alleged miscarriages of justice relatprocedure. "The problem with the Appeal Court is that it tends to look at former trials in a very blinkered way. Yet, if you look at a whole series of convictions quashed for police impropriety, the problem has always begun with the eruption of a national passion in the wake of some atrocity for the police to make convictions. In a free society you can't prevent that kind of hysteria, but you do need certain

Mr Hattersley, whose pol-itical outlook spans Labour's left and right wings, was anxious to point out that radical change was not all he had in mind. Labour would prove that it was the party of law and order by building on the government's attempts to reduce the courts' use of custody and greatly expanding crime prevention.

Schemes such as Neigh-bourhood Watch and the Safer Cities programme pointed in the right direction but were being undermined by a lack of central funding. There would also be a bstantial, as yet unspecified, increase in police manning. Mr Hattersley, aged 57, strongly believes in the traditional style of British policing centred on the unarmed

thinks a policeman may just walk round the corner." Such support for the police and the traditional model of British policing would not come without a price, though. Labour would make police authorities, who have statutory powers to oversee policing outside London, wholly elected bodies, removing the right of mag-istrates to occupy one-third of the seats. They would also be encouraged to set targets for reducing the recorded level of crime in localities, and to adopt new shift patterns designed to maximise the availability of manpower on the streets. Labour would create a special council to work with the Court of Appeal in helping courts to interpret sentencing guidelines laid down by Parliament. While Labour supported the broad thrust of the government's new "punishment in the community" strategy, it feared that min-isters were placing too much aboard the mercy flight organised by Edward Heath, the former prime minister, who travelled to Baghdad and secured the release of 33 sick and elderly people, the answer is simple. Joseph Wild, who was allowed home because he has a heart condition, said last night the government should pay up and claim the money from Iraq.

We could be going with them if Thatcher had just kept her mouth shut a little more often," said one of the British workers, whose observation was met by nods of agreement from his colleagues.

The outburst is typical of a growing number of the hundreds of Britons trapped in Iraq and Kuwait, who are reasingly directing their anger towards the British gov-erument amid signs that the Iraqi regime is exploiting their ament skilfully.

The attitude has raised con-cern that a "Stockholm syn-drome" could be developing between some of the Western hostages and their Iraqi captors. The mental condition was first discovered in the 1970s when an emotional bond developed between hos-

siege of a bungled bank rob-bery in the Swedish capital. Initially the thousands of Westerners held by Iraq were used as a crude human shield to deter American air strikes. President Saddam Hussein's first attempt at manipulating his "special guests" for prope ganda purposes ended in failure when he visited a group of British hostages and outraged the world with his clumsy attempt to befriend a young British boy. Now, however, Baghdad has discovered that the hostages' plight can be used effectively, firstly to undermine the Western military alliance through the selective release of some nationals, and secondly as a means of diverting world attention from the invasion of Kuwait. Dr James Thompson, a senior lecturer in psychology at London University said: "After an extremely clumsy start the Iraqis are beginning to bandle the bostage issue very skilfully. The first propaganda stunt backfired terribly, but it seems he (President Saddam) has listened to his advisers and now they have become more sophisticated in THREE British hostages sat using the hostage issue as a on the wall at the entrance to smokescreen to divert attention away from the real issue. We now talk about the hostages rather than Kuwait.

The impasse has also enlast week at the start of their abled Iraq to use the predica-iourney home. abled Iraq to use the predica-ment of the 1,300 trapped Britons as an instrument against the government.

Penny Dix. a psychothera-pist at the Gulf Support Group, said: "For many people, both hostages and their relatives, there is great anger because they feel they have been forgotten. They have to pin it on someone and usually that is Mrs Thatcher and the government.

"Saddam Hussein is playing on this very well; every few days our hopes are raised that some more hostages might come out. He will play this out as long as he can."

In the latest move, the Iraqi authorities have invited the relatives of bostages to visit them in Iraq at Christmas. It was dismissed as "a cruel and calculating Iraqi ploy" by the Foreign Office and the US State Department, but wel-comed by many wives plan-ning to take up the offer.

Of growing concern to the Western consular officials in Baghdad is evidence of the "Stockholm syndrome" taking root among the hostages.
"We see the Stockholm adrome in people who have lived here for many years,

explained one diplomat.

"They start saying that the Knwaitis were greedy, selfish people and that Iraq had some justification when it invaded."

Dr Thompson said that the relationship could form quite naturally under the present conditions, "People who are held horsess on form a head held hostage can form a bond of affection with their captors, particularly if the captors are not holding guns to their heads and the conditions of their confinement are good, It is human nature to be friendly with a human being next to you, even if he is your captor."

The condition has been diagnosed by Dr Bertel Berg, a Swedish hostage in Baghdad, who has developed a programme for his fellow captives to help light the borodom and despair of three months'

Call-up for US weekend warriors

From Susan Ellicott IN WASHINGTON

THE Pentagon is to call up for Gulf duty thousands of week-end warriors from military reserve combat units. The move was seen as a signal to Baghdad that Washington's resolve is as strong as ever and came as the exiled Emir of Kuwait said yesterday that he would prefer his country to be "liberated today rather than tomorrow" and would not mind if a rescue from Iraqi occupation took place without the backing of the United Nations.

The reserve troops are expected to leave in coming weeks among a deployment of up to 100,000 further troops announced earlier. Two-thirds of the 330,000 troops in Operation Desert Shield are American. The emir, Sheikh Jaber al-Ahmed al-Sabah, yesterday urged James Baker, the US Secretary of State, to free Kuwait swiftly after Baghdad vowed it would never withdraw its troops "even if we have to fight a dangerous war". The plan, drawn up with WWF advice, has been stalled Tiananmen Square in June 1989, and in July this year Prince Philip, the fund's interchances of the panda surviving at the present rate of progress are not good."

Yesterday Mr Song, who is in Geneva for today's ministerial session of the World Climate Conference, visited WWF headquarters at nearby Gland and told Charles de Haes, the fund's directorgeneral, and Chris Elliott, its China programme co-ordinator, that Peking had decided in principle to implement the plan, which involves extensive conservation and management measures in the bamboo forests that are home to the remaining animals. There are an estimated 1,000 giant pandas left, principally in Sichuan, but also in the provinces of Gansu and Shaanxi.

CHINA is to implement its funding to give the plan, long-awaited management whose full cost over the next plan to save the giant panda five years is now estimated at £30 million, would be taken by next March, he said, in time for China's next five-year economic programme.

Mr Elhott said last night: "This is very good news for the panda, coming after all the since the killings in delays of the past year. It is a major step on the road to saving the animal, although we shall be even more ennational president, said: "The couraged when the financial decision is taken."

The funding discussion will take place between the state council and the Chinese ministry of forestry, under whose aegis the plan was drawn up. It includes new reserves, increased patrolling of existing reserves, and "bamboo cor-ridors" between isolated clumps of forest.

Mr Elliott said: "Mr Song is the most important politician in China to oversee the environment and we are heartened by his evident commitment to saving the panda. He is fully informed about the plan and feels it is a national priority."

The fund would probably be contributing a "six-figure sum" towards the cost of the full programme, Mr Ellion A decision on what level of said.

Mr Sharon, however, said Israel had "a tremendous mission." He added: "We have an urgent need for apartments. We have land, but we have a shortage of builders and contractors.

Embattled Republicans seek to limit election damage

ENOUGH mud has been slung to refill the Channel tunnel. The annual budget of a small Third World nation has been spent on negative advertising. After months of campaigning, Americans, or at least the third who can still be bothered to vote, will today elect governors for 36 of the 50 states, a new House of Representatives and a third of the Senate. Their choices will affect the country's political direction for a decade or more.

The elections are more than a referendum on the performance of a troubled Republican White House, though the results will be seen as such. At stake is whether the Republicans can lay the foundations for regaining the Senate they last controlled in 1986 and breaking a 35-year Demo-cratic stranglehold on the House of Representatives; or - much more likely - whether the Democrats can continue to build their congressional strength to the point where a Republican president can no longer be confident of having

Deprived of the anti-tax, anti-communist warcry which carried them through the 1980s, the Republicans enter the elections with the economy deteriorating, polls registering a national pess not seen since the dying days of the Carter administration, and ranks deeply divided after last mouth's tax-and-budget melodrama. Mr Bush's ratings have fallen more steeply than those of any president since Gerald Ford pardoned Richard Nixon after

As American voters go to the polls today, Martin Fletcher assesses the prospects in elections that will affect the nation's political direction for a decade or more

Republicans had high hopes of nez, the Republican governor, set making significant advances, but the talk now is of damage limitation, with experts predicting the possible loss of a dozen House ats, a couple of senators and up to half a dozen governships.

It is the governorships that really matter. Next year there will be a once-a-decade redistribution of House seats to reflect national population shifts. This could swing 40 seats. State legislatures redraw the congressional district boundaries, and only the gov-ernor's veto can prevent them gerrymandering. This explains the Republicans' desperation to retain the governorships of California, Florida and Texas, all of which have Democrat-controlled legislatures. These states will gain 14 new congressmen between them; their combined delegations would then account for nearly a quarter of the entire House.

All three races are close. In California, the biggest prize, last-minute polls showed Pete Wilson, the Republican, fractionally ahead of Dianne Feinstein, the former mayor of San Francisco. In Texas, scene of the year's nastiest gubernatorial contest, Democrat Ann Richards has in the campaign's dying days pulled level for the first time with Republican Clayton Williams, In Florida, Bob Marti-out as an unpopular incumbent but has clawed his way back to a virtual dead heat with his Democratic challenger, Lawton Chiles, a mayerick former senator who will not accept more than $100 from any contributor and spurns modern electioneering techniques.

There are three other big states to watch. In Massachusetts, with voters seething at the outgoing Democratic administration of Michael Dukakis, John Silber has been waging an angry outsider's campaign to fight off Republican William Weld. In Illinois, Jim Edgar is struggling to retain the governorship for the Republicans in the face of the anti-tax campaign of Democrat Neil Hartigan. In Ohio, George Voinovich, the former mayor of Cleveland, could snatch the governship for the Republicans despite a late resur-gence by the Democrat, Anthony

Add potential Democratic gains from "redistricting" to a couple of Senate gains and a dozen or more Republican losses in today's House elections and the balance of power in Washington would begin to shift decisively.

At present Democrats have a 55-45 Senate majority and 258 of the 435 House seats, a record for an opposition party in a president's first term. A two-thirds majority in both houses is required to override a presidential veto, but even with the present composition some of Mr Bush's 16 vetoes to date have been sustained by a handful of votes.

This lends importance to the six of the 35 Senate races where incumbents, three Republicans and three Democrats, are in trouble. The most prominent is Jesse Helms of North Carolina, the veteran conservative who, after an ugly campaign with racist overtones, goes into the election fractionally behind Harvey Gantt, the liberal champion of the "new South" who would be America's first black Democratic senator. In Oregon, Mark Hatfield, the Republican incumbent for 24 years, has been battling to ward off Harry Lonsdale, a Democrat businessman who has tapped antiincumbent, anti-Washington sentiment. That same anti-incumbency mood has Minnesota Republican Rudy Boschwitz fighting for his political survival.

The Republicans may lose one or two senators, but they have high hopes of ousting Daniel Akaka, the Hawaiian Democrat, and slim hopes that Tom Tauke, a Republican congressman, could still defeat Tom Harkin in Iowa and that voter anger with anyone associated with Michael Dukakis could topple John Kerry, the Democratic senator in Massachusetts. They would be satisfied if they can maintain the status quo in the Senate. Their real hope of regaining control lies in the 1992 elections, when several Democratic senators who won seats with small majorities in 1986 must face

Apart from Mr Tauke, the Senate Republican campaign committee recruited four other popular congressmen to challenge for Senate seats held by vulnerable Democrats, but the tactic appears to have failed. Lynn Martin's $6 million challenge to the liberal Paul Simon of Illinois looks doomed, as does Claudine Schneider's against Rhode Island's clderly, patrician Claiborne Pell and Bill Schuette's against Michigan's left-leaning Carl Levin.

Sitting congressmen, like sitting senators, enjoy overwhelming fund-raising advantages and are notoriously difficult to remove. More than 98 per cent were re-elected in 1986 and 1988, and this year is likely to be little different. In about 380 of the 435 elections incumbents have little or no competition. The real battleground is for the 29 seats where the incumbent is stepping down. Of those, 18 are held by Republicans and 11 by Democrats.

Over the past week Mr Bush appears to have stemmed a Republican free-fall by diverting public attention from the budget fiasco to the Gulf. But there has been a conspicuous lack of an overriding political issue to galvanise voters. The Republicans fear that many supporters, disillusioned by its agreement to raise taxes, may stay at home. The Savings and Loan crisis and the budget fiasco has engendered a "throw the burns-out" mood. It is likely, for example, that Lowell Weicker and Walter Hickel, both former Republicans, will win the gubernatorial contests in Connecticut and Alaska to become only the fourth and fifth independent governors this century. In Vermont Bernie Sanders could well become the first socialist congressman since 1950.

Mr Shekhar and Mr Gandhi are due to hold talks today.

There is an outside possibility that Mr Gandhi will seek to become prime minister, backed by the Shekhar faction. This will depend on President Venkataraman, who has con-stitutional authority to accept or reject new political alignments. He might decide to call a general election, although he is determined to avoid doing so for fear of unleashing greater violence.

Amnesty accuses Burma of brutality

By OUR FOREIGN STAFF THE Burmese military government has created a secret state of terror, killing thousands in a ruthless purge on dissidents, according to an Amnesty International report. People are living in a cli-mate of fear, says the report, and simply knowing a government critic can bring the risk of arrest and detention by the military. Thousands of people have been shot dead by soldiers, gunned down on the streets or in back alleys in a dramatic upsurge of abuse since 1988. The military arrests people anywhere and has relentlessly tortured govern-ment critics. Hundreds of people have vanished into the prison system and into 19 detention centres where torture was carried out, according to the report. Torture is an ever-present threat for political prisoners.

Monks who took part in recent anti-government dem-onstrations had been killed, while opposition leaders and MPs were arrested. The judicial system has been reduced to an assembly line feeding Burmese prisons, the report said, Martial law provides these tribunals with absolute authority in political cases and strips defendants of important rights.

Even though the May elections returned an overwhelming majority against the military rulers, the government has shown no sign of relinquishing power.

The regime retains power through brutality. Along with the shootings are repeated reports of torture: favourite methods include "walking on the sea-shore", being forced to crawl on broken glass or sharp gravel; "riding the motor-cycle" in which the victim is forced to crouch over an imaginary motorcycle, and the "iron road" where an iron bar or a bamboo cane is rolled up and down the shins until the

the Japanese about their lukemental issues but you will no longer be able to accuse them of maitreating their microchips. On Sunday, dozens of Japan's top electronics engineers held a Buddhist service at a Tokyo temple to pray for microchips and other sophisticated electronics components that have been worn out during rigorous experimental testing on the laboratory bench.

Although many Japanese have a fairly unsentimental attitude towards animals - if the sea bream being sliced up by the sushi chef is not twitching as he fillets it, diners may complain that the fish is not fresh enough - they like to pay their respects to inanimate objects that have served them well.

It is not new for solemn temple services to be held for worn-out daily household items, such as needles and brushes, to show gratitude for their usefulness. But Japanese engineers have only now begun to feel a pang of guilt about the sacrifices made by microchips which have spent exhausting lives in the research department, and which never found fulfilment in a computer or television set. The engineers decided that since Japanese products have a reputation for durability and reliability, Tokyo's Chomeiji (long life) temple would be a suitable spot for the service. A Buddhist priest chanted sutras to lay the frazzled chips to rest.

A prototype of the linguistic computer was unveiled to Margaret Thatcher when she visited Fujitsu

during her trip to Japan last year and was quickly veiled again when it failed to perform as fluently as Fujitsu had hoped. All of Japan's computer giants are developing translating machines, but Fujitsu has now become the first to offer the public a chance to have a page of Japanese translated into English for 800 yen (£3).

Unfortunately, Fujitsu's pride in its new baby persuaded it to use the machine to translate its own publicity handout for the service. As a result, part of the brochure reads: "The majority of the result is announced in Japanese through an active research of the science and technology in Japan is paid attention all over the world. One school of thought holds that the struggle for daily survival, coupled with 70 years of repression, have sti-fled all inclination to revolt. Another argues that the political repression was lifted just in time; the revolutionaries who might have come from the dissident movement of the 1960s and 1970s have by and large been absorbed into mainline opposition politics. Yet another view is that the concept of revolution, together with the words liberty, equality and fraternity, have been so devalued since 1917 that they no longer provide inspiration for charge.

Bolshevik revolution and its aftermath genetically "beheaded" the Russian nation, neutralising, killing or forcing into exile those most capable of independent thought.

Students march in France for more cash

From PHILIP JACOBSON IN PARIS

TENS of thousands of highschool students took to the streets in towns and cities all over France yesterday in demonstrations that summoned up a distinct whiff of May 1968 and all that. The biggest turnout was in Paris, where about 30,000 young people marched on the National Assembly as deputies were preparing to debate the financial provisions of the new budget for education.

The Paris marchers set off under a single banner proclaiming "National Co-ordination of Lyceens," chanting rythmic, occasionally rude, slogans directed at Lionel Jospin, the education min-ister. "More money, more teachers, more security" was a popular theme.

The Socialist government's protestations that more money is being spent on education today than ever before evidently cut no ice with those who have to cope with grossly overcrowded classrooms, lack of textbooks. and qualified teachers.

The pupils of the nation's lycées are clearly intent on regaining the momentum gathered by the first protests that began a month ago.

by is she so abrasive? If only she were more polite and agreeably receptive to the views of our European partners she would have much more influence from the inside. There is a strong sense of dėjà vu about these propositions. They emanate from the same people who attacked the prime minister in 1981 and 1984 for her strenuous campaign to reduce the overcharge in Britain's net EC contributions. They thought it anti-European of her to invite discord over a measly thousand million pounds or so, the surrender of which would make us more popular in Europe.

or or which works made to be popular in Europe.

She ignored the vehement criticism of the great and good who swarm like rich 18th-century aristocrats in policy-making circles and who disdain vulgar squabbles the money is not theirs but the taxpayers'. But since she began her EC contribution battles we have had rebates worth £10 billion—not exactly a trivial tip that should have been given without fuss to a head waiter to show bonhomie.

There was the same distaste at her anger over the refusal to deal with the urgent matter of farm subsidies at the Rome summit. Strangely, this was described as imunautaire. Why not let the Germans, the French and the Italians happily continue at our expense huge subsidies to inefficient farmers whose votes may determine election results? But it was the Brussels Commission itself that was so keen on implementing the proposed farm subsidy cuts from 1986 to 1995 by 30 per cent which, allowing for reductions aiready made, would mean not more than 15 per cent now. Even Brussels saw the danger of the rest of the world being so infuriated by the wrecking of the Uruguay international Gatt round that they would put up barsh tariff barriers against the EC in reply to the Community's denial of access to its markets of cheaper

Mrs Thatcher is slammed for fighung for British interests. She is slammed for fighting for EC interests. She and those who agree with her are labelled "little Englanders" by those who are "little Europers". They believe the EC can self-sufficiently import the EC can self-sufficiently ignore the outside world. The Financial Times, no friend of Mrs Thatcher, wrote on October 29 that with this posture the EC would be left examining "its economic, monetary and political navel - all the while watching the international trading system disintegrate around it. Of course, Mrs Thatcher could have fudged with emollient words Her great value to Britain and the EC is that she never does. She forces the consideration of stark reality however much it may temporardy offend genteel spurits who like to pretend about the distant goals of a single currency and a supreme central European bank. Mrs Thatcher disturbed the cosy conversation by demanding to know what such notions would lead to. We have been enthusiastic leaders in implementing the Single European Act, in tearing down commercial and trading barriers between the EC countries, despite the deliberate dallying behind, some very far behind, of others. Enthusiasts for the extinction of our national identity by a federal Europe run from Brussels rely on its inevitability because of three words after the beading of a chapter in the Single European Act called "Co-operation in Economic and Monetary Policy". The words, and they are in brackets, are "economic and monetary union".

This is already happening without consent. Rightly or wrongly we have fully entered the European Monetary System by joining the exchange-rate mechanism. To go further into a single currency, a central European bank and complete political union would need an act of Parliament. Particularly as the words of the Single European Act require that "for the further development of the community, member states shall...take account of the experience acquired in co-operation within the framework of the

shall...take account of the experience acquired its co-operation within the framework of the EMS and in developing the ecu".

Britain's full membership of the EMS since last month is clearly insufficient experience on which to base any further steps. Nigel Lawson is an enthusiast for ERM, but on October 23 in the Common he retirerated his vehement opposition to a single currency and a European central bank. "A single European central bank. "A single European currency means a federal Europe." Mr Lawson is in favour of independent central banks co-operating closely together but not of one dominating European central bank. Others who agree with him also know that Britain would be unable to make its own budget, fix its own interest rates. QED: the end of any effective national sovereignty.

These issues are so grave that they should be decided by a national referendum some time after the next election. There is no hurry. Many objections will come from other EC members now that Mrs Thatcher in her blunt, fruitful way has started to make them look seriously at the implications. We shall not be left on the sidelines and without influence on the outcome. Meanwhile, Tories should forget the receding non-event of Sir Geoffrey Howe's resignation, and trust John Major to get the economy right in time, and together with the prime minister and Douglas Hurd to deal wisely in Europe. Tory MPs should tell the opportunist Mr Heseltine to get lost without promoting a divisive leadership contest in which he would be the permanently discredited loser.

es, since you ask, it was a very busy weekend indeed. I spent the whole of it rewriting my will.

I suppose I should amplify that terse announcement, if only to settle the fluttering breasts of those who might believe themselves to be my legatees, and who are even now muttering blimey that has to be some will it has taken him two days to rewrite it. he must have more than anyone guessed. I always thought there was something a bit fly about him, I wonder who gets the chain of casinos, I wonder who gets the Reeperbahn flophouses, I wonder who gets the un-catalogued Van Goghs and the lost dinner service of Tutankhamun?

Forget it. It was not the rewriting that took the weekend, it was the rereading of that with which the rewriting was concerned. I have been going

You will, I know, have been following the Larkin cause macabre. How could you have missed it? For weeks, not only have the easements of Fitzgovia rattled to the din of grinding axes, the furore has spilled over into every public print and on to every public channel, as those who have never read a line of poetry throw their two penn'orth into the posthumous tussle between an unacknowledged legislator of the world and the battalions of acknowledged ones. I shall say nothing of that since so much has already been said that the words expended on whether Larkin wanted his unpublished stuff destroyed now considerably outnumber the words of his published stuff, and anyway.

Perhaps nothing so distinguishes the poer from the hack as his attitude towards his unpublished work. The poet's attic is full of stuff he wouldn't publish, the hack's only of stuff he couldn't. For one thing, there is never anything a hack is so ashamed of writing that it prevents him from seeking someone who is not ashamed of publishing it, and for another, while the poet's diddy-boxes are crammed with letters, potebooks, diaries, well-turned suicide notes for such deployment as future despair might require and various other private scribblings, all of which stand testament to man's need to express the innermost churnings of his soul, the hack's have nothing in them except those agglomerations of correspondence and invoice which stand testament only to man's need to keep the wolf at the far end of the garden path.

I have inserted a clause in my will insisting that all my unpublished work be published. # The pilot flies on instinct few days ago, with his political fortunes falling around him, his friends deserting him in droves and with Saddam Hussein taking an unusual pleasure in The Washington Post opinion pages, George Bush went out for a quiet dinner in a private house in Georgetown. There were the usual folk — the CIA chief William Webster and his new wife, Lynda, the urbane British ambassador and Lady Acland, a supportive property developer, a Supreme Court judge, and a few more.

There were no votes to be won for today's mid-term elections except from the servants, no arms to be twisted except in play. The president signed a certificate welcoming Mrs Webster as a new member of the intelligence community. Security was light. He was as relaxed as if he were a Roman emperor with successful armies conquering the world for him while he caroused.

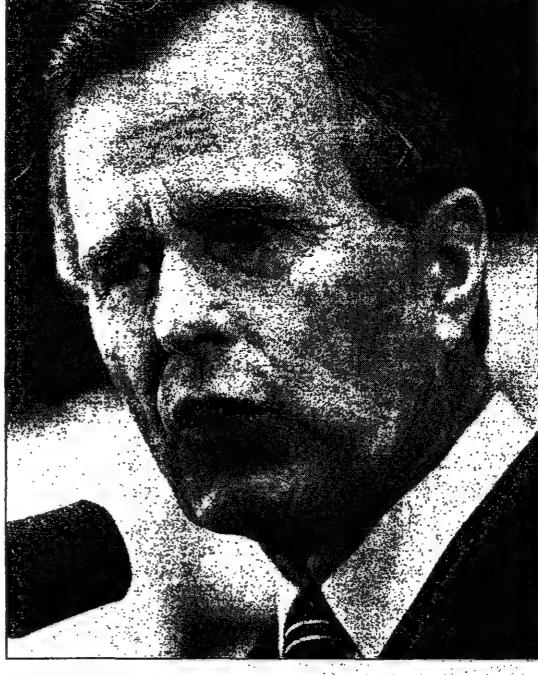

Many charges have been laid against George Bush in the past weeks but no one has suggested that the job is getting on top of the man. In recent days he has been cheerfully speaking to difficult campaign audiences throughout the country in races whose results will inevitably and unfairly be judged as a verdict on his presidency. Thirty years ago he was a model of the anxious American businessman, balancing the do-mands of Texan oil customers with the duties of good citizen and father until a stomach ulcer stopped him in his tracks. Today, the heavens might fall and George Bush's first thought would be to put the event in proportion. Which is just as well for him — if, sometimes, disquieting for those whose job is to advise the president or predict what he might do. Millions of words have been written since August about how Iraq's opponents should read the mind of Saddam Hussein, but just imagine, as a White House aide suggested on Friday, being Saddam Hussein and trying to understand George Bush. Saddam could listen to a thousand crumpled sentences from the president and they would not much help his comprehension. Mr Bush says that he has "had it" over Iraqi treatment of hostages. With one side of his uneven grin he talks of war, with the other of diplomacy. One day the well-informed writers at The New York Times describe a chaotic presidency, with as little idea of its Gulf strategy as it had about its budget. On the next day, equally well-informed White House reporters say how consistent he has been.

Which is the truth? Perhaps, if you are Saddam, you shrug and turn to reading the rubbish in your own newspapers. Arabs do not care too much for words. They look at what Mr Bush is actually doing. They see enough firepower in the Saudi Arabian desert to turn Baghdad into the proverbial parking lot. They also see an unprecedented alliance put together by a man who is every foreign leaders friend. Does he have it in him not to make war? Does he have it in him not to make war? Who knows?

If the Iraqi dictator is asking these questions he is doing today what dozens of George Bush's opponents have done in the past attempting to discover more about the man than he knows himself. This is no easy task. President Reagan had an agenda; President Reagan had an agenda; President Carter, whose discredited record Mr Bush has been recalling on the stumps this week, wore his heart on his sleeve; the affable President Ford is sometimes likened to Mr Bush; so is President Eisenhower, but both of those men had a solidity which George Bush somehow seems to lack.

"Grappling with Bush is like beating up on air," commented one former Reagan aide. "He likes to think of himself as a pragmatist, but pragmatists know where they're going. I don't know where George Bush is going or where he is taking us. I don't think that he does either."

This line of criticism does not,

however, take the opponent very far. The idea that George Bush "lacks a vision" has become an inadequate cliche it has always been dangerous for Bush opponents to move from a perception of him as a "nowhere man" to that of a "nothing man". Manuel Noriega made that mistake when he thought that his long tinks with the president and his other American friends would protect him in his Panama City palace. Michael Dukakis got the answer wrong when he thought that the Bush presidential campaign would be as durant as the man himself.

Meanwhile, George Bush has reached the half-way point of what is still a remarkably successful first presidential term. A few mouths ago he was so popular that no Democrat opponents had taken the trouble to prepare for a White House bid in 1992, hoping to wait for a crack at Dan Quayle in 1996. He had won wide praise for his careful creative approach to the collapse of communist power.

ow he has only normal levels of presidential mid-term subport. Opponents, including the New York Governor Mario Cuomo and Senator Sam Nunn of Georgia are finally gathering in the Democratic ranks. In his own party the right talks of putting up the isolationist conservative, Patrick Buchaman, for a primary show of dissent. Loyalist campaign shouts of "Bush, Bush, Bush, Bush, Bush" have been met this week by rightwing repties of "Squish, squish, squish"; and Republicans still squirm at the debscles over the budget. But, outside Washington, it is hard to discera deep popular disquiet about George Bush. Although he has not shown himself a strong positive leader, he enjoys enormous respect.

Grappling with George Bush is like beating up on air. I don't know where he is going?

It is true that he was decisively rejected when, seeking support for his tax-aising budget compromise, he appealed on television over the heads of his colleagues to the American people. But the trouble with that budget appeal, according to an aide who has worked for both Bush and Reagan, was that a president who believes in reaching solutions behind closed doors was not being true to himself in the Reagan era, most of the response to a television message was prepared in advance; the phone-ins to congressmen were organised Unless he is fighting an election, and not always even then, George Bush can't be doing with that stuff.

The 41st president of the United States has never been called a man of ideas. It is hard to think of any serious thought to which his name can be attached. Last year some friendly commentators tried to formulate a "Bush doctrine" out of the mass of reactions to the death of communism. Last week, at a dinner of sympathetic Republican supporters, no one could remember quite what the doctrine was, but nebody thought that manered very much.

In the past few weeks he has been in open war with his own party machine, but bad results, unless they are unprecedentedly bad, are unlikely to inflier serious damage on the president's personal standing. A cock-s-hoop Congress of Democrats may make cermin acts of government harder, but the president has long perfected the art of of putting trouble in its place. He is a genuinely well-balanced man. He does not elevate politics too high.

This week, after months of spugbudget summitty with Democrat leaders, he set off on the campaign trail, bashing them for taxing and spending and backstabbing as though they were enauchs of Saddam Hussein. Only if one treated stump speeches tike a pariour game could one happily troop around the southern states as the president did at the weekend. The man who was a Republican congressman in the Sixties, Republican national committee director and CIA chief in the Seventies, vice-president and president in the Eighties, asks to be seen as the "outsider" of the Nineties. He bashes the villains of Washington as though he had never even visited the place; but it is without malice.

No political opponent would look through the president's speeches for a guide to what George Bush might do. He once described Reaganism as "voodoo economics" but cheerfully swallowed the magic medicine for years. He made the famous piedge to "read my lips: no new taxes" to win the Republican nomination against Senator Bob Dole, but the right-wing tax-cutters never believed him anyway. George Bush is no master of the English language. He scrabbles for words as though he were scraping the bottom of a fish tank. "I am not a very articulate emotionalist," he told reporters who asked about his feelings after the Malta summit.

Most Americans outside New York and Los Angeles are not very articulate emotionalists either. To

Most Americans outside New York and Los Angeles are not very articulate emotionalists either. To anderstand George Bush an enemy needs to go further back than the past few years of strangulated, exaggerated, ungrammatical utterances about diplomacy, war and tax. The president is part of an America which is patrician, unassuming and understated. He is "the master of the small gesture" according to John Sumunu, the White House chief of staff. There are cards of thanks from George Bush on sideboards and mantelpieces all over America. As a result of this flowing bonhomie, Mr Sumum's own gestures must often be targer and rougher than his chief's. But Mr Sumunu is dispensable. "Like a field latrine, when he is full, he can be covered up and a new hole dug somewhere else," said one Republican observer.

utdoor military metaphors and earthy humour are an important our are an important our are an important in the Bush camp. The president is a world leader of the account world war generation, one of the last in harness. He was the youngest aviator in the navy and had a good war about which he himself is reticent, although his hagiographers are not. On the day that he calls for air strikes on Baghdad he will have more personal experience of facing enemy bullets than any president since Eisenhower.

Mr. Bush's sense of personal connection with his soldiers and

Mr. Such's sense of personal connection with his soldiers and with the American civilians in Baghdad and Knwait is likely to be a key determinant of war in the Guif. When he was a young man in 1940, he was deeply affected by a lecture from the elder statesman, Henry Stimson, who was a powerful advocate of the moral case for intervention. Although he is less effective than Stimson in communicating his courage, that does not mean that his sense of the violation of right by wrong is not just as great. His is a simple code and Saddam Hussen has broken it.

That conclusion cannot be derived from a theory or a vision, its truth emerges from a mass of chiner, a hundred phone calls with old friends, like the secretary of state James Baker and new confidentes like Margaret Thatcher. The process may not have been satisfying to his press critics. This week a New Republic magazine complains that George Bush's policy is not just guided by the wind and the currents, it is the wind and the currents. Saddam could take some comfort from this, since it will help him believe the president might indeed be prepared to leave him in Baghdad, according to the dictates of the international weather forcess.

If President Bush's international affices fatt as fast as the Republican opinion poll-ratings have done, then he may be less relaxed on his next Georgetown outing, instead of playing the successful Roman emperor, he may look more like the last emperor of China, whose provinces fell unobserved while he are. In the meantime, the president, preparing to be a war leader, can enjoy his food more than can his enemies at home or abroad.

The Post Office says that on average 600 letters a day are received from Baghdad, but most letters from Kuwait are now being smuggled out by released British hostages and other foreign nationals.

Despite yesterday's complaints by Tory MP Str John Stokes about the "mewling and puking" of hostages and their families, the great majority of the missives are jolly and optimistic, and Travis's show regularly plays requests. Dr Osman, who fives in London, has incensed his countrymen with a new book, Mases Pharoah of Egypt, which claims that Moses and the Pharaoh Akhenaten, the father of Tutankhamun, were the same person. The British Museum has already refused to stock it, but was not prepared to discuss its decision.

Osman has received a number

"I have deeply offended Jews and Christians but I do not apologise for what I have written. It's carefully researched. I have had threats and I may go into hiding if they get worse. The book has caused deep offence in Egypt. There is widespread anger that I have suggested one of our most famous pharoahs was the son of an Israelite mother. The Jews object to the fact I say Moses is an Egyptian."

Osman is no stranger to controversy. His last book, Stranger in the Valley of Kings, was banned in Egypt. He might be glad if this one is banned too.

GERMAN INTERESTS

the product to the state of the A year after the Berlin Wall was opened, Germany's weight in the European balance of Control Control of power is palpably greater than at any time since 1945. The reunited country's size and wealth inspire respect. The German achievement is qualitative as well as quantitative. A federal constitution of proven stability and efficacy, the English besides a political and economic elite of high calibre, have contributed to a revived impression across Europe of effortless German Pang de superiority. In Helmut Kohl, the Germans possess - and are certain to re-elect next month - the most successful, if not the most profound, European politician of his generation. What are the implications?

German foreign policy has long been remarkably consistent. Since the same man, Hans-Dietrich Genscher, has been foreign minister for the past 16 years under both ruling parties, that consistency is not surprising. Even if Herr Genscher were to retire after the election, his successor may be expected to continue in the master's footsteps. In public, his policy has blended a cold ideological agnosticism with woolly federalism. German national interests are vigorously asserted when they matter - notably over agriculture - but well away from the gaze of his British admirers.

Helmut Kohl is a more straightforward German patriot, though coalition politics have inhibited him from giving free rein to his fondness for the Fatherland ideal. But as his mastery of both Deutschlandpolitik and Ostpolitik has grown over the past year, so the tone of German foreign policy has become less ingratiating and more peremptory. Especially since what German diplomats call "the miracle of the Caucasus" - last summer's deal with President Gorbachev, which cleared the way for a reunited Germany to belong to Nato -Herr Kohl's negotiating manner has even bordered on the insufferable.

Herr Kohl began to realise, probably in early 1988, that Mr Gorbachev was not a communist version of Joseph Goebbels. After his old rival, Franz-Josef Strauss, returned from Moscow with hints that Mr Gorbachev might no longer be committed to the Honecker régime, the chancellor saw he should sit down with the bear. By the following winter, he too was in Moscow, with only Mrs Thatcher expressing concern about concessions he might make in return for Soviet promises.

Herr Kohl saw off her challenge in the spring of 1989, when President Bush failed to insist on the modernisation of Lance missiles - Mrs Thatcher's test of German loyalty. With a Soviet promise of self-determination for the German nation in his pocket, Herr Kohl was ready for the coming upheaval in central Europe. His ten point plan for reunification, produced within days of November 9, left his countrymen cheering and his allies floundering.

He has carried on thus ever since: over the border dispute with Poland, which he handled. with considerable insensitivity; over first German and now European monetary union; over farm prices and the Gatt round; this week over European policy towards Iraq. Herr Kohl is conducting his foreign policy not as Europe sees fit, but as he sees fit. The tradition is not so much that of Adenauer (who deferred to Washington and Paris) as of Stresemann or the later Bismarck, Like them, he pursues a cautious but determined strategy, designed to forge a new balance of power after the demise of the old.

Herr Kohl's long-term aim now seems disturbingly vast: a European state fashioned on the model of the Federal Republic. His insistence that German interests should not be overridden in a future European federation is legitimate nationalism, a nationalism he shares with Mrs Thatcher, His ill-disguised opinion that Europe's foreign policy should be synonymous with Germany's - from admitting Eastern Europe to the Community to sending Willy Brandt to Baghdad - is presumptuous. As long as Herr Kohl continues to speak the language of the federalist 1950s, while engaging in the nationalist power politics of the 1990s he cannot be surprised to be treated by other Europeans with coolness.

MERGING SATELLITES

The merger of Sky Television (whose parent company also owns The Times) and British Satellite Broadcasting raises important questions of public policy. Broadcasting naturally stirs the political juices and the merger is already controversial. Owners of The Times, both now and previously under the Thomson family, have long had an interest in other media, including television. Even the Astor family, owners before the Thomsons, considered a television shareholding. Television profits helped Lord Thomson to maintain The Times. Most quality newspapers have at some time been subsidised from other business.

Such cross-ownership has been beneficial Readers' choice of newspapers, and thus of a range of opinion, would be curtailed without it. Nor is there anything inherently wrong in vertical or horizontal diversification, as between the press, publishing and broadcasting. The only proviso is that such integration should not so impede competition as to operate against the public interest.

The merger of Sky and BSB has certainly run into criticism on this score. Through the BSB satellite franchise. Mr Murdoch, an American citizen, now has 50 per cent of a British satellite service. The law says a non-EC national cannot control such a service. He also now has more than 20 per cent of a British television franchise (that is, the former BSB licence). In the past, the government has outlawed so large a holding by a newspaper proprietor, largely to avoid regional media monopolies. Ministers have yet to judge whether this rule will be retained, in the regulations to be introduced under its new broadcasting law.

These difficulties could be circumvented by the new merged company abandoning the old BSB franchise, with its satellite, squarials and D-MAC system, and concentrating offshore on Astra. That would evade the letter, if not the spirit, of the current regulatory regime. But there is no point in the regulators forcing such circumvention as long as the merger is not against the public interest. Is it?

Satellite broadcasting is in its infancy, facing huge technological difficulties and fighting the terrestrial duopoly of the BBC and ITV companies. Millions of pounds have been poured into satellites, dishes and product, proving far more costly than originally expected. This cross-subsidy has come from a wide range of newspaper and television companies, including Granada and the Financial Times, hoping in due course to see profits flow the other way. These interests bring to broadcasting a natural synergy, both as suppliers of news, sport and arts journalism and as part of the entertainment business.

Were the new satellite company to establish a dominant position in television, then there would be a case for monopolies regulation to come into play. Parliament is right to be concerned that media outlet for opinion in Britain is not constricted by corporate aggrandisement. Legislation is in place to guard against this.

Such a concern cannot at present be said to apply to this particular merger. Satellite channels enjoy barely 30 per cent of viewing even within the 2.3 million homes able to receive such television. They have roughly a 2 per cent market share of the television audience. In addition, the offshore Astra satellite itself has numerous other channels available to competitors. Separately, the two companies simply would not have survived. Together, they stand a chance of offering limited competition to the existing BBC/ITV duopoly.

Undoubtedly the affair has made the government's new-found regulatory regime for television look tattered. Ministers are reviewing the secondary legislation promised by the broadcasting bill: the experience of the past two years of satellite broadcasting clearly demands a new licensing policy. The Office of Fair Trading is already looking into the competitive implications of the merger. In judging the pros and cons, there should be only one question: what offers viewers the widest possible choice?

REGENT STREET WISDOM

This year Christmas decorations appeared in London's Regent Street in the last week of October — still in British Summer Time, Nothing better illustrates the plight of West End retailing than the fact that "Christmas" now lasts more than two months and is celebrated in a style more appropriate to Blackpool's Golden Mile. While the shopping streets of New York, Paris and Stockholm celebrate the season with a stylish filigree of white lights, Regent Street chooses crude plastic cartoons, slung across the street with no respect for architecture or aesthetics.

With the support of Westminster Council, the street's landlords, the Crown Estate, are pushing ahead with proposals for a £4 million upgrading of Regent Street's "furniture". Lamp standards, litter bins, railings and bollards are all to be redesigned to accord with the Edwardian architecture. Despite the customary howl of abuse that greets every plan for urban improvement, this attempt is worthwhile. The ugliness that blights so many London streets lies not just in poor upkeep but in deplorable furniture design.

Regent Street, the very heart of the capital's shopping industry, has been spoiled by municipal clutter intended to speed the traffic, as well as by insensitive shop fronts and signs. The great houses of Austin Reed, Liberty, Peter Robinson and Aquascutum are now jostled by high street multiples blaring their wares with standardised corporate design. The proposed street furniture is at least in keeping with the flamboyant style of the facades. If individual items are unsuitable, that does not invalidate the general principle of improving the environment in harmony with the character of the street, rather than in harmony with the taste, or lack of it, of municipal supplies departments. The essence of Regent Street is the presence of big West End stores. To retain their appeal to Londoners and visitors, they need help from good planning. The department store offers a service that complements the smaller specialist shops of Soho, Covent Garden and Knightsbridge. But such shops will thrive only if they can keep the street outside their front doors clean and tidy, their surroundings attractive and public transport

The key to this improvement, in the Regent Street of tomorrow as in many European streets today, is ruthless traffic control. Traffic is noisy, dirty and restricts pedestrian freedom to roam. Its relatively free movement through the heart of the West End may help office commuters and prosperous country visitors. It is no help to shopkeepers. Even Bond Street, long attached to the idea that its plutocratic customers should not have to leave their Rolls-Royces some distance away, has suffered as a result. Space for people to move about on foot is now recognised as a magnet for shoppers witness the piazza at Covent Garden or pedestrianised South Molton Street and Leicester Square. Regent Street would not be itself without a few red buses chugging down its length. That apart, nothing would do more to enhance the street's daytime appeal than pedestrianisation. Regent Street may never recapture the smallscale stucco charm of Nash's Quadrant, but its Victorian and Edwardian buildings still form a magnificent promenade. To replace its miserable furniture to ban standardised shopfronts, to clear it of traffic and plant it with trees would recreate this great avenue as one of the noblest in Europe.

Hunting on National Trust land

From Sir Richard Acland Sir, Last Saturday, at the National Trust's AGM, a group whom I describe as the "idealists" won a narrow majority to veto the hunting of deer on Trust property (reports, November 5). They are thus described because their argument reduces to seven words: "Hunting causes pain to deer: abolish it!"

Following the previous five heads of my family, who seldom, if ever, hunted, I have always supported the argument of those I describe as "realists": "Those who would abolish the hunt will turn more than 90 per cent of Exmoor farmers from the warm friends into the deadly enemies of the deer, and thus enormously increase the pain they suffer".

From time to time farmers, who love deer, report the presence of an injured animal in their woods, Fifty-seven times in the latest available year the hunts have sent out a few hounds to track down these animals and have them put out of pain by bullet. Many had gangrenous wounds filled with maggots, their bellies gnawed by rats and their eyes pecked by jackdaws. In this one way hunting saves deer more pain than it causes.

Last summer I suggested to principal officers of the Trust that they use their considerable resources to convey this realism to their members. But they preferred to keep a low profile, relying on a legalistic argument about it being for Parliament, not for the Trust, to abolish hunting on Trust land. As if there were any prospect of keeping heat out of the idealists' argument!

Insurance medicals From the Chief Executive of the Association of British Insurers Sir. Dr. Smith (October 26) sugsests that people having a medical examination in connection with a life insurance proposal should be given the results. There are a number of reasons why this would not be appropriate.

The examining doctor is asked not to pass on the results because he is not in possession of complete information relevant to underwriting the proposal. For example, certain medical tests may, be undertaken separately and there may be aspects of past medical history which do not emerge from

For insurance companies themselves to provide medical results would come between the doctorpatient relationship which is so important. In practice, if an

Clergy assessment From the Reverend Father M. H. Brvant

Sir, The income and housing of the clergy of the established Church has for centuries been subject to a system of which Colonel Hordern, as a churchwarden (October 25), is obviously aware. The system replaced the more purely evangelical one which he seems to favour. If he wishes to see the restoration of the riskier approach, would be also be prepared to accept its corollaries?

These would include an acceptance by the laity of an obligation to support their priests, and of a celibate clergy. There is little evidence to support the view that such changes would be acceptable to more than a minority.

The average Anglican layperson envisages a quite different rela-tionship with the clergy, which is evidenced by Colonel Hordern's suggestion that the laity should have the power to extend a priest's working life, or to curtail it, as they see fit.

Car deliveries

From Mr M. L. Keepfer

Sir, In response to Mr David Buck (October 23) the car manufacturer's "ex-works" delivery charge reflects the average cost of delivery from one of the manufacturer's plants to its supplying dealers, not to the customer's address. Some dealers may make a small charge for this service, depending upon distance. In Mr Buck's case around £30 would not be unusual.

Some manufacturers publish the delivery charge in their official price lists and dealers adhere to this rigidly, but most do not and this does leave room for profiteering by dealers. Mr Buck's charge of £338. 30 plus VAT certainly seems excessive although other "on the road" charges are made, typically £20 for number plates and £100 for 12 months' road fund licence. It may seem unfair if you buy a new car from a dealer next door to the plant and pay the same charge as if the car had been delivered from, say, the manufacturer's Spanish. German, or Japanese plant, but no fairer system has yet been devised. On the other hand it is difficult to think of any other consumer product where you are charged for the cost of delivering the goods to the supplier

Elusive shadow of the 'Fifth Man'

From Mr Nigel West

Sir, Lord Armstrong of Ilminster (November 2) seems to prefer the uncorroborated testimony of a single KGB lieutenant-colonel than the 18 British intelligence personnel who gave evidence during the Fluency committee's enquiries, set up in 1964 to investigate Soviet penetration of the Security Service, that there was evidence of penetration until

It may well be that Oleg Gordievsky is correct but his "revelations" to date do not inspire much confidence. The book he co-authored recently contains almost no new information, not a single unpublished cryptonym, but much material that is demonstrably false. Take, for example, his assertion that "Grigori Kumich" was a KGB defector (p. 404, 708). In fact no such person ever existed. Similarly, much of what Gordievsky has to say about Anthony Blunt is either contradictory or patently untrue. As for his suggestion that Leo Long's Soviet codename was ELLI, the chronology cited by Gordievsky is entirely Contrary to Lord Armstrong's recollection, Cairneross's status as a member of the KGB's Ring-of-Five is not "new to many". In Molehunz, published in 1987, 1 wrote: "Burgess, Maclean, Philby and Cairneross had all been members of the group known as the Ring-of-Five (p. 37).

There is a long tradition of Soviet intelligence defectors deliberately embroidering their "mealticket" to exaggerate their status. Gordievsky has already been caught out claiming to have been "the most senior Soviet intelligence officer ever to have worked for the West" (Time magazine) and to have been the KGB's top men in London. In fact he was neither.

Yours faithfully. NIGEL WEST 310 Fulham Road, SW10. November 4.

From Mr James Rusbridger ... Sir, As Lord Armstrong knows the truth can sometimes be an economical commodity and, therefore, before he accepts Mr Gordievsky's claims about Mr Cairneross he should consider what evidence exists to substantiate them.

When Mr Gordievsky's allegations about the "Fifth Man" were first peddled to the media, it was claimed they were based on his "unprecedented access" to KGB archives, a statement which the November 4 at the age of 74.

David Stirting became an almost legendary figure, not only in the British forces but also among the Germans and Italians in the desert. From Auchinleck was suffering from insignificant beginnings - a acute manpower shortages be handful of officers and a few allowed Stirling to raise a score men - Stirling triance value and elusive character led Rommel to create a unit with the sole function of and bringing this desert fox to bay. The Germans, almost as mesmerised by the aura the six foot six colonel created around him as his own men,

dubbed him "the Phantom

major".
The son of Brigadier-Genbald David Stirling was brought up in the Highlands and educated at Ampleforth. He then went to Trinity College, Cambridge, but, more interested in racing and gambling than in learning, he soon left. He next wanted to be the a five year training plan had to be abandoned on the outbreak of war and he returned home to join the Scots Guards. Army routine did not suit

Its aim was to take over British unit of equal strength." and run essential services. Stirling must have been an endless worry to the guards at his prison camp in Italy. He escaped four times until eventually he was taken away and shut up in Castle Colditz for the rest of the war.

After 1945 Stirling settled in Southern Rhodesia, Believing that the future policy for Africa must come from within, in 1949 he formed the Capricorn African Society, which expanded to include the six Commonwealth countries of East and Central Africa. Stirling worked to lay the foundations of a non-political society based on common citizenship without racial discrimination and a qualitative franchise. But he was viewed with suspicion and scepticism by blacks and whites ahke and his efforts were in the end overtaken by political events. Returning to Britain, in 1961, he formed Television International Enterprises, a consortium to provide capital loans for building and equipping television stations in emerging countries of Africa. A more controversial idea was a company called Watchguard offering bodyguards and other security services to foreign who also created a unit whose heads of state. This and other such patriotic organisations which sprang covertly into existence at that time, were publicly condemned by the defence secretary of the day, Roy Mason. Feeling that it had gone off at half cock Stirling disbanded GB 75 in 1975, the year in which its existence was to have been made public. Stirling was next revited to lend his backing to the Movement for True Industrial Democracy (Truemid), a group of moderate trade unionists committed to fighting left wing extremism in the unions. He wrote the foreward to Truemid's inaugural pamphier. The Day of the Ostrich. Stirling's belated knighthood, awarded only in this year's New year's honours, perhaps reflected official hesitancy in the face of his unorthodex activities of the 1970s. Nevertheless, "Who Dares Wins", the motto he chose for his SAS Regiment, is a fitting epitaph for a man who not only has his niche in the history of the desert war, but at home and abroad in the

MARY MARTIN

Mary Martin, star of South Pacific and many other American musicals, has died aged 76. She was born in Texas on December 1, 1913.

American girl with a voice that made the songs of Rodgers-and-Hammerstein sound both intimate and familiar all round the world. For two generations of Broadway theatregoers she was Peter Pan and, most especially, Ensign Nellie Forbush of South Pacific, who for hundreds of nights washed that man right out of her hair on stage. She was the original nun to note that the hills were slive with the sound of music and for Cole Porter she was the girl whose heart belonged to daddy. Mary Martin, together with Ethel Merman, made the American musical dream the Seventies. Only very seldom thereafter was she to find New York when the Great White Way had been at its whitest and brightest.

and a violin-teaching mother. By the time she was five Mary had decided that the violin was not for her, but when she reached the age of ten she was such an eager pupil in another

she most needed were nonsinging lessons. Her teenage years were spent largely in the local cinema watching the musicals of Busby Berkeley, many of whose dance routines she taught herself at home before opening a dancing school which, financed by her parents, soon had more than 300 pupils. After an early and unsuccessful marriage in Texas, which produced the Dallas actor Larry Hagman, Mary Martin decided that she had spent enough time teaching and would now like to enter show business herself. Accordingly she moved to Hollywood, finding work as a radio and nightclub singer before she went east to audition for Cole Porter and the 1938 revue Leave It To Me. With one song in it, "My Heart Belongs to Daddy", which she no unorthodox sexual imchange in the musical theatre lyric of a daughter to a father, that came with Sondheim and Mary Martin became a Broadway star overnight.

She was summoned back on film or television the immediately to Hollywood on success that had been hers in a long and lucrative contract which led to four years of filming with Bing Crosby, Dick Powell, and Robert Pres-Mary Virginia Martin was ton in a series of deeply the daughter of a lawyer father undistinguished screen musicals.

By 1943 she was back on Broadway, having unwisely rejected Oklahomal in favour of an overnight flop called Dancing in the Streets. Her first London appearance was in 1946 at Drury Lane, where she starred in Pacific 1860, a South Seas operetta written for her by Noel Coward, but one which did not meet with much critical or popular approval. She returned to tour America for two years in Annie Get Your Gun before opening in April 1949 in the musical that was to be forever identified with her, Rodgers and Hammerstein's South Pacific, which she played on Broadway and at Drury Lane and on most potent in the postwar always claimed to believe had tour for more than three years. After occasional and usually non-musical theatre, Mary Martin first played the musical of Peter Pan in 1954 and eventually committed her tomboyish Texan celebration of that role to American television where it was repeated as an annual Christmas treat for the remainder of the 1950s. Several seasons were spent on revivals of old hits such South Pacific and Annie get Your Gun on the road before Mary Martin achieved another great Broadway hit in 1959 with The Sound of Music which she played with Robert Preston for more than a year. Her voice sounded by now, wrote the American critic Walter Kerr, "like red wine at room temperature". He did not say what sort of red wine. She retired to Brazil with her second husband and minager Richard Halliday to write an autobiography and a bestselling book on needle-point. Following Halliday's sudden death in 1973 she came out of retirement for occasional concerts with Ethel Merman and then toured throughout America three years ago opposite Carol Legends, which was never

Mary Martin will be remembered not perhaps as a great actress or stunning singer but for the sheer vivacity of her diminutive stage presence, one that was only very seldom caught by the cameras though nowhere bet-ter than in the first musical special ever made live and in colour for American television back in 1956, when she and Noel Coward alone held a nation-wide audience of millions spellbound for 90 to treat for peace. Immediately after Government, supposing that of Mexico sufficiently humbled, had offered to negotiate; but the only reply given was, that the communication would be laid before Congress, to assemble on the 6th of December next. It is understood that a similar answer has been returned to an offer of mediation between the belligerents on the part of Her Majesty's Government. New Mexico has been annexed to the United States, without a shot being fired. 2,000 men, assembled by General Armijo for the defence of Santa Fé, the capital of the province, joined the invading force under General Butler, and the authorities. including the clergy, took the oath of allegiance to the United States without hesitation. Chihuahua is the next department menaced in that direction, and will probably share the same fate.

Accounts from Nuevo Leon represent General Taylor as besieging Monterey with 6,000 men. That city is defended by General Ampudia, with an equal number of soldiers, and about 2,000 irregulars. Some reports state Ampudia's retreat on Saltillo to be cut off, the Americans having already occupied the passes. If Amoudia should be obliged to surrender, the effect will be nearly fatal, as General Taylor can then advance to San Luis Potosi without opposition.

tion, their development may be hoped for on the restoration of peace.

A system of colonization producing the admixture of other races is edy admitted to be necessary, and this cannot be accomplished without this cannot be accompisance without that religious toleration which is still absurdly withheld. A beneficial change in their commercial policy towards other nations may also be anticipated.

General Paredes has received his passport to leave the republic. He is undoubtedly a man of patriotic intentions, and superior to the vulgar corruption of money, but his mental capacity proved unequal to the task which he voluntarily assumed. He leaves his country a banished man, but without any reasonable ground of complaint. His power was founded on a military revolt, and the treachery of which he was guilty towards Herrera met a fitting retribution in the conduct of his own subordinates.

Don Jose Maria Tornel, who had steered his course with unerring skill through every revolution for a quarter of a century, miscalculated on the last. He believed Santa Anna's return to power impossible, and did not hesitate to declare himself his foe. In consequence he has been deprived of his office, as director of the Mineria College, and ordered to retire to Tehuacan, a village in the midst of a wilderness, where he will be much at a loss for employment unless inclined to botanical pursuits.

Sex and the singular store

Underwear is lacy, flirty and sexy again, says Marks & Spencer. And it should know. says Liz Smith

he close-fitting clothes and short straight skirts in fashion today would seem to demand the sieek base of a stretchy bodysuit or smoothline bra and knickers. So who could have predicted the demand for the lacy, sexier-looking styles that women are buying today? Marks & Spen-

The store chain where one woman in three in Britain buys her underwear understands better than most the need for more luxurious bodyshapers to wear underneath a short, shapely suit. M&S can measure the success of flirtier styles in tons of lace and millions of miles of soft Jacquard satin. The company has watched as customers switched from basic bras (women buy 1.6 each a year) and "three-to-a-pack" knickers (five pairs a year) to more glamorous underwear smoth-ered in lace and trimmed with pearls and ribbon.

Forget "natural" bras; according to M&S, female customers today want some engineering to shape, uplift and emphasise curves. Women have tired of the severely sporty, asexual lines of the Eighties and feel free to include again in underwear that is flirty and fun.

M&S sells 70 million pieces of underwear a year (excluding nightwear). Laurie Oppenheim, the merchandise man-ager for M&S lingerie, therefore speaks with some authority when he describes the world's favourite bra. "Underwired, in all-over stretch 'Fern' lace, £7.99," he says. "It went into the stores in August and instantly went to number one in all our stores, whether in Madrid, Barnsley or Toronto. That probably means it is the best-selling bra in the world." M&S has observed that bosoms are getting bigger, too. Today the average size bra 18 a 36C cup, compared with the 34B of five years ago. This statistic should not be taken to suggest that silicone breast implants are common practice on the National Health Service. "Women may be bustier, but they are also more careful than before to buy the right

rs from St Michael: lacy bra and briefs from the best-celling Pearls range (left), and softly scalloped satin ca

sized bra," Mr Oppenheim

When he describes the success of Pearls, his department's latest line in underwear. Mr Oppenheim can hardly conceal his excitement. "It is going a riot." he says. Pearls, which made its debut in September and is now the top-selling line in all branches, includes bras (from £7.99) and briefs (£4.50), camisoles (£9.99), slips (£10.99) and French knickers (£7.99) in satin Jacquard lavishly trimmed with lace.

The way he tells it, the yearlong, £21 million development of Pearls is a racy story unfolding from a frag-ment of lace spotted in Calais to an international saga involving 240 looms and four dye works in Japan creating 1.6 million yards of Jacquard satin, and lace-makers in Nottingham and Calais weaving 2,750 miles of lace.

The outline for Pearls, and every other autumn 1990 line, was hammered out between buyers in the three lingerie departments at a meeting in the M&S headquarters in Baker Street in June 1989. "Women obviously wanted more glamour," Mr Oppen-heim explains. "We noted the move away from man-made nylon to more luxurious fabrics like polyester satin, fine cotton and stretchy Lycra and

"We linked the trend for prettier detailing to fashion changes in outerwear. Coulder's fondness for revealng underwear has definitely influenced the market. Women like to wear wrapover blouses that reveal something pretty underneath, so we supply something pretty."

accordingly, and the lifecycle of the Pearls range began Rosemary Hancock, the fashion director of Sheers, major supplier of underwear to M&S, spotted a fragment of Leavers lace in a factory in Calais that fitted the brief she had just been set by M&S

A sample length of polyester Jacquard satin was woven in Japan, using the lace as the idea for its all-over pattern. Mr Oppenheim and his team were enthusiastic. Eight different types of lace were developed from the original for straps and other forms for

The underwear technology department then had to "pull quality. Co-ordinating the production of 15 different pieces of underwear in matching fabric and lace is always tricky. A bra, constructed to 25 different sizes and with around 15 component pieces, takes longer to develop than a camisole that involves only a bit of stitching.

Colours for the Pearls range vere limited to cream and plus ruby as the additumn to be delivered to 160 stores. And the pearl stitched to the centre of a bra or pair of bikini briefs provided the

She did not train formally in jewellerymaking, although an embroidery course at Goldsmiths College sparked her appetite for felt-making and decorative knitting. Spotted by Jean Muir shortly after leaving college. she produced two jewellery ranges a year for the company for eight years, also coming up with her own eccentric annual collection.

Unusual jewellery in her show includes Indian-inspired animal and plant-shaped brooches and colourful interpretations of jazz and dance. Some pieces have "homes" into which they slot for wall displays when not being worn. "I like the idea of being painterly while still giving my pieces a practical application," she says. Making hand tuffed wool rugs is her newest enthusiasm. Like Ms Sherburne's jewellery, the rugs are richly coloured and tactile. So far she has rufted a huge fish, starfish, lizard with daffodil, a shield and a violin.

BRIEFING

Not the real thing

NEXT Sunday's one-off performance of the National Theatre's hit musical, Guys and Dolls, now looks as if it will not be quite the reunion of original talent for which everyone was hoping. The evening honours the production's late star Ian Charleson, who died in January of Aids. But of Charleson's three co-stars at the musical's 1982 opening, only Julia McKenzie will be on hand to reprise her award-winning performance as the adenoidal Miss Adelaide. Bernard Cribbins fills in for Bob Hoskins, who is filming in France, and Belinda Sinclair inherits Sister Sarah's shoes, first played in this production by Julie Covington.

LONDON City Ballet has won an endowment award from Texaco for "artistic excellence". Worth £150,000 over the first two years, the endowment will help fund a full-time ballet mistress to improve the dancers' technique, and will also cover the cost of a lighting designer. Meanwhile, Harold King's independent ballet company is preparing for its firstever Christmas season at Sadler's Wells with a new staging of Cinderella, choreographed by William Morgan, Scottish-born director of Bangkok Dance

WHEN the star finishes, so does the show. Or so will be the case with the Broadway production of Lettice and Lovage which has announced that it will close December 23, when Maggie Smith, its Tony Award-winning leading lady, completes her nine-month contract. The timing in a way could not be worse, since it deprives the producers of income from the Christmas/New Year week, always the busiest of the year on Broadway. In addition, Lettice has been the unquestionable straight play smash of this past season and few forthcoming shows look likely to repeat its

The prin-cipals for the last performance at the Coliseum (0°1-836 3101) include Susan Bullock as Pamina, Neill Archer as Tamino. n New York the impression is often that art curators hunt in packs. There is nearly always a flavour of the month. This autumn, two ideas dominate: Mexican art, and the reassessment of neglected American artists of the last 100 years. Then there is the squabble of the season, without which New York art would not be complete. This time it is the ambitious Museum of Modern Art supershow High and Low, curated by Kirk Varuedoe, the museum's newish director of the department of painting and sculpture, in collaboration with Adam Gopnik, art critic of The New Yorker. Charles Bremner has already outlined the nature of the rumpus (Arts Page, October 15). The idea is to bring together high art of the 20th century with examples of popular culture, and to show how vitally they have been interrelated. A perfectly reasonable, academic objective, carried out in a perfectly reasonable, academic way. The show is slightly misleading, in that it is presented as though it is following one clear line of development, when in fact it is quite deconstructed. But it is certainly not the barbarians storming the citadel: the triumph of vulgarity within the sacred Moma precincts.

In fact it is devoted almost exclusively to high art, of the kinds which have been one way or another connected with the popular and pictuan: from Picasso's use of bits of newspaper in his Cubist colleges to Roy Lichtenstein's appropriation of frames from the strip cartoons of his day. The show is entertaining and sometimes revealing (though the catalogue is more so), but the controversy is decidedly cooked up.

The centre of the Mexican cultural festival is the mammoth show at the Metropolitan, Mexico: Splenders of Tairty Centuries, which sallops galiantly through the story from earliest prehistory right up to Tamayo who, in his nineties, is concurrently having a show of recent work at Mari-borough New York. The other shows, such as Women in Mexico (20 modern women artists) at the National Academy of Design; Mexico: Painting 1950-1980 at the IBM Gallery, Mexican Muralists and Prints at the Spanish Institute and Aspects of Contemporary Mexican Painting at the American Society, fill in the corners without insertantly modificient the overall importantly modifying the overall impression. Which is just what everyone has always known: Mexico has been preoccupied with death for as long as there has been a Mexico to define, and Surrealism seems to have come naturally to Mexicans long before there was a Surrealism to define.

The Pre-Columbian works still look as though they came from another planet, the colonial days are generally dullish, and the early 20th-century revival has spawned more dreams than the reason of

Revival time brings round an unlikely assortment of half-forgot-Cari Melchers at the National Academy and Albert Pinkham Ryder at the Brooklyn Museum is entirely fortuitous, since both are in the midst of extended tours. Ryder (1847-1917) was the great eccentric among 19th-century American painters, developing his own visionary style in almost total disregard of what anyone else was doing, and adventuring technically to such a degree that many of his paintings are now in irreversible decline and (the organisers of the exhibition observe with a certain ghoulish pleasure) will probably never be sensibly exhibitable again. There is still enough to see of his classic moonlit scenes to establish his uniqueness, and the appended roomful of forgeries bears surprising testimony to his popularity at

Melchers (1860-1932), whose show has now moved on to Detroit and Richmond, is only a generation later than Ryder, but is in every way worlds apart. Very cosmopolitan, he trained in Düsseldorf, was working in Brittany shortly before Gauguin, was friendly with many of the Hague School and with Puvis de Chavannes, and lived as much in Europe as in the United States. The painting, as might be expected of someone so entirely disregarded since his death, is charming eclectic and fairly slight. It is also formidably accomplished, and from the historical point of view is quite fascinating, like seeing the styles of a half-century passing across the canvas like clouds reflected in a limpid pool.

The Whimey Museum's big rediscovery, Burgayne Diller, is in comparison a damp squib. He lived too much in the shadow of Mondrian not to be obtherated. Diller is a perfectly estimable artist serious tasteful and beautifully finished. But it is impossible not to be haunted by feelings of deja-vu while walking through the show. At the end of his life he comes up with a style of painting and construction which does not recall too much his master's voice. But it is minimal originality to sostain a lifetime's work.

Final royal flight

Terry Hands talks to Benedict Nightingale about The Seagull, his last RSC production

t a time when most people are thinking of Terry Hands only as the Royal Shake-sprare Company's embattled artistic director—and some as the man who has led his tribe into the Red Sea without first parting the waves - it is worth remembering that he is also a successful director of drama. In his 25 years with the company, his midwifery has produced Alan Howard's Henry V, lan McKellen's Romeo, Derek Jacobi's Benedick, Ben Kingsley's Othello and scores of other fine performances in dozens of plays by the RSC's house-dramatist. In the process he has, he wryly concedes, won a name for "big-gun productions", large in scale and extravagant in visual invention.

With the company's ample theatres in Stratford and (until now) London making their mexorable lemands, he has not often had the chance to test his prowess with smaller guns. But his final production as the company's chief is, as ithappens, likely to be one of his most modest. The play he is opening in Stratford tonight is Chekhov's unshowy The Seagulf, its habitat the informal Swan,

Apart from a touring production of his short The Proposal, Hands has never tackled Chekhov before. "But the moment I saw the Swan in 1986, I thought 'that's the place to do The Seaguit"." he recalls. "With Chekhov, you don't. want coups de théaire, you don't want big directorial concepts. You want to feel that a group of actors got together and themselves built the play. You want the improvised feel the Swan allows."

A thrust-stage with little decor obviously encourages an immediacy and directness not easy to achieve from behind a pro-scenium arch. But it is still a strange place to find so realistic a play. Hands has however, long believed that Chekhov "is not a stice of life, not cinema verité, but highly wrought with highly poeticised speech. Moreover, an unconventional setting seems to him particularly suitable for a play he sees as a running debate about talent and creativity, theatrical style and theatrical content. For him, its main symbol is not the seaguil Konstantin shoots, but the tacky little theatre in which he stages the odd, original play he has written. "He's like an embryonic Peter Brook," says Hands. "No scenery, a new language, mighty theater the heart several way have themes. He keeps saying we have got to find fresh theatrical forms. we have got to get away from the high priests of theatre. Yet at the end he decides that it's not a question of form at all, but of writing directly from the heart."

Konstantin's mother, the actress Arkadina, has something to say on the subject, as has practically every other character in The Seaguil. In their conflicting views, Hands sees parallels to the argument currently going on in Britain about the value of the arts. But his love of the play is personal too. "As it's my last RSC produc-tion," he says. "I have a particular interest in a piece that speculates about the nature of those of us who work in the theatre." That is not of course, the play's only theme. For Hands, it is also a kind of whodunnit, which ends by asking the audience to apportion the blame for Konstantin's lastminute suicide. Then again, like so many of Clickhov's works. it is about yearning and disappoint-ment, the desire for fulfilment and love and the difficulty of achieving them. Hands's view of The Seagult as a play centrally concerned with play-making itself is open to dispute; but few will argue when he describes its author as the greatest poet of failure".

Hands is unsure of his precise plans after he leaves the RSC next year. Bin he would like to freelance as a director for a bit, then get involved in some capacity with a theatre company, possibly in France, Germany or America. Whatever happens, the importance to him of The Seagull is clearly considerable. It has, he says, taken him back to his days as founder of the Everyman, Liverpool, 30 years ago. On that rough stage, there could be little scenio pretension. It was a place for emotional simplicity, not technological display, for actors not as all-powerful director. "That's the sort of theatre I've come to believe in. That's where I can feet myself again. That's where whatever i do in the future will be growing from."

THE last time the baritone Thomas Allen appeared in this space, he was high on Butterworth's idle hill of summer. Now Virgin Classics has moved him on to Brahms's Mittel Europa for a disc of songs inspired by German and Austrian poets and the verse of Bohemia and Hungary.

This is quite the best thing Allen has done for Virgin. The immediate world of each song is lived in to the full, as the voice rides the full distance of Brahms's melodies, basks in their barmonic warmth and lests their rhythmic muscle Focus is sharper here than it was in his earlier Schumann disc. Whether in the con-fidences of "Wir Wandelten", nicely poised between curiosity and secrecy, or in the exploitation of deep reservoirs of breath. Allen grips the attention. There is, though, a new sense of concentration, a greater dimension of strength already showing in Bar's handling of the darker Heine songs. He finds a real after ego of anguish for "Der Doppelganger", and is the equal in stature, if not yet in deepest pitch, for the world-carrying "Der Atlas".

Recent musicological discoveries have underlined the fact that Mahler's piano-accompa-and Thomas Moser's recording of the piano version of Das lied von der Erde (Teldec 2292 46276-2) was revelatory. Siegfried Jerusalem's new release of the Rückert Lieder and songs from Des Knaben Wunderhorn is an equally strong advocate of the more familiar piano versions of these songs, thanks to Siegfried Mauser's strongly defined accompanying.

Jerusalem, highly sought after as an operatic heldentenor, is at his best in the larger scale, more overtly dramatic songs. The four "soldier" ballads from Des Knaben Wunderhorn are refreshingly bluff and coarse-textured, and the full scope of his treats his tenor recreates the dark night of Mahler's musical soul in Ruckhert's midnight songs.

THEATRE Going Home

Newcastle Playhouse

THE writer Alan Plater is in love with Australia, Tyneside, football and jazz. He hates theme parks. fast food joints, monetarism and Muzak. Astringency, therefore, might be expected in this study of a Geordie returning to Newcastle from Australia after 30 years' absence. There is certainly nostalgia; a vein of bittersweet wistfulness for what is irretrievably lost, a note struck often in Plater's work, especially in television where the medium's intimacy and flexibility lend themselves to revisiting time and place. At the Newcastle Playhouse a local audience laughs knowingly (but not without pride) at the homecomer's aghast reaction to "the largest commercial complex in Europe", the Metro Centre ("it used to be called Gateshead"), to the litany of demolished pubs and theatres, and the old mate, now a plutocratic developer, whose idea of attending a football match is to swig champagne in an executive box and watch a monitor screen, To a certain degree, the same story can be told of most of our great cities since the 1960s.

Uniquely Geordie, however, is the warm-hearted robustness, the resilience in the face of hard knocks, without Birmingham's dourness or Liverpool's self-pity. The piece works best in the interplay between Bob (Tim Healy), his disillusion with the new Typeside edged with cheerful Australian brashness, and his rediscovered family: sister Mary and her glum husband. CURRENT

Some of the plot's contrivances fit in uneasily. The unknown girl who watched the lads play football 30 years ago and whom Bob shyly fancied turns out now to be married to the profiteer. Bob's long lyrical paean to Australia, his account of Gough Whitlam's failed revolution, and the Anglo-American conspiracy, jar awk-wardly. The old mate who sold out, excellently played by Mike Elliott, is too much the doubledyed villain: the idealistic leftwinger who now owns clubs and restaurants (one in a converted church where, to his annoyance, the font has been listed) and outrages Bob with his racism. The Australian elements seem to belong to a different play.

To music from an on-stage jazz combo led by Ian Carr on trumpet, Max Roberts' production unfolds fluently with trucks providing restaurant, living room and football ground, and even a bench complete with gloomy family group emerging from a trapdoor. The drama of nostalgia, with Bob conjuring up his dead father for advice, comes off better than the political tract; but that may be the play's fault.

RADIO

Mask of Time.

SUNDAY'S The Radio Programme (Radio 4) took a tin opener to a small can of worms and then bust a gut in applying a bicycle pump to the contents. Perhaps only media folk could seriously bother about the subject in hand - the proliferation of training courses in "microphone technique" for captains of industry - and perhaps only the latter will wonder what the fuss is

According to this report, the fuss goes like this: if such figures turn up at the studio with a GCSE in Interview Science under their belts there may be less likelihood of a real interviewer securing "the truth" for the benefit of his audience. More fuss: these proknows?

fessional interviewees are increasingly being trained by moonlighting media jocks who might one day find themselves on the other side of the microphone. How does one conduct a penetrating interrogation of someone whom one has tutored in the art of self-presentation? On the other hand, how can one avoid doing a thorough job on someone whose technical deficiencies one already

In a certain "media training school" in London, a paradigmatically unimpressive businessman was thus admonished by his tutor, formerly a Newsnight reporter. You gave a very weak and dull interview because you were caught off your guard." Not because - for sake of argument - he had a congenitally weak and dull mind but because he had yet to absorb the doctrine of preparedness in which the school was inculcating him for a fee. The ex-reporter, now head tutor, is worth quoting. "At the end of the day, what I believe we're creating out there is a pool of interesting people who have something to say and who are not afraid to come on and say it." Cliches aside, why does this sound ominous? Might one not object that anyone with such an urgent interest in presenting him-self in a good light should be banned from radio on aesthetic grounds? After all, it is not unreasonable to suppose that the enlightened listener wants amateurism, contradictions, inspired non-sequiturs, rather than another intake of speak-your-weight ma-chines posing as "interesting people".

This programme offered an object lesson in the virtually unchallenged self-importance of Interview Man and his relentless. uncorruptible quest for "the truth". In context, the poacher/ gamekeeper antithesis was itself a well-fleshed red herring which allowed the reporters who engage in such extramural activities to deny vehemently that there could ever be a conflict of interest, or that (for example) they had crossed the line from a neutrallyweighted professional service into the murk of shameless public relations.

One contributor claimed in his defence that what he and his colleagues were doing was an exercise in "levelling the playing field" — and there is the rub. Neutrality is an ideal. What they are really doing is promoting the apparently innocuous but quite possibly insidious notion that the values of broadcasters have somehow become the central concerns of everyone. This is eminently resistible.

8.00 Down to Earth. ⊕ CHOICE. Promising a "new approach" to archaeology. Down to Earth offers a weekly mixture of stems with the emphasis on topicality The departure from the 50-minute single-subject format of the BBC's traditional archaeology slot suggest an attempt at popularisation simed towards those who might not normally follow the subject. But on the early evidence the only obvious ture in this direction is a regular spot gesture in tree and tree to enthuse for a well-known person to enthuse the about a favounte site. Otherwise there is a good ballast of academic exception and the resident presenter is a senousminded Cambridge don, Dr Catherine Hills. The other reservation is that trying to cover five or so subjects in half an hour less commercials is not going to leave much time for depth or detail. Tonight's topics include the redundancies at the Museum of London and a Roman

ille dig in Northemptonshire 6.30 Check Out, includes an investigation into private clamping companies and Senkah Guha challenging Virgina Bottomiey, the health minuster, over whether British children are being disadvantaged by the government's failure to adopt a national child care

9.00 Critical Eye: Behind the Cocame

CHOICE: Two Colombian tilmmakers, Patricia Castano and Adelaida Trutillo, whose work has previously been shown on Channel 4 and in the BBC Everyman series, highlight the tragedy of their country's peasantry as it is caught in the crosstre of a murderous civil war. Students of third world politics will note a familiar pattern On the one hand are the communist guernilas, on the other a strong military force, backed by the United States. The drug trade has complicated the issue, with traffickers joining landowners and armed forces in an anti-communist crusade in three years 6,000 people have died. including three presidential candidates and a researcher on this him. Castano and Trujillo focus on the attempts by human rights leaders and peasant groups to organise a democratic alternative while in constant fear for their lives. 10.00 Film: My First Love (1988). Golden Girl Beatrice Arthur and Richard Kiley star in this touching and perceptive romantic comedy. After being alone for more than a year, a widow is desperate for companionship Despite encouragement from friends to meet new men, she cannot help but dwell on the past, especially a medical school romance which took place 35 years earlier. The affair is renewed but the course of true love does not run amooth. Directed by Gifbert Cates

State, said yesterday the Gulf confrontation was entering a new phase and America had to be prepared to take advantage of any available option to resolve it. His remarks, made after a three-hour meeting with the exiled emir of Kuwait in Saudi Arabia, were widely interpreted as signalling the Bush administration's determination to go to war with Iraq if international sanctions fail to drive President Saddam Hussein's troops out of Kuwait.

But Mr Baker emphasised that Washington would prefer to solve the situation "in the political,

"association", a period to relax out of their cells with fellow inmates, for only two hours every third day. Only one cell at Armley has a toilet.

The inspectorate was so alarmed by the regime on B wing, the subject of repeated criticism by penal reformers, that it considered the only long-term solution was for the Home Office to abolish custodial remands to Armley for offenders aged under 21. Although staff-inmate relationships appear amicable throughout Arruley, management needs to imbue prison officers with a new sense of reforming purpose, the report says. There is also evidence of racist attitudes among staff.
The report also urges officials to consider installing chemical toilets in cells as a temporary measure; to launch an immediate programme to fit showers on all existing wings; and to raise pay rates for inmates

Last night, the Home Office said it did not believe creating a task force was the most efficient way of tackling Armley's difficulties but that all the proposals would be studied carefully. David Waddington, the home secretary, said "strenuous efforts" were being made to improve the quantity and quality of the regime at Armley. Staff were warned by another inmate that Simon Willerton, aged 17, a remand prisoner, had tried to kill himself just hours before he hanged himself in a cell at Armley jail, an inquest at Leeds heard yesterday. The inquest continues.

JAMES Baker, the US Secretary of economic and military spheres". At Mr Baker's request, the emir, Sheikh Jaber Ahmed al-Sabah, promised to increase Kuwait's financial contribution to Opera-tion Shield if the Gulf confrontation extends into next year. The emir also called for the swift liberation of his country. He made the call the day after Baghdad vowed that it would never withdraw its troops "even if we have to fight a dangerous war".

The two men met in the mountain resort of Taif, where the emir has been in exile since Iraq invaded its neighbour three months ago and declared it Iraq's 19th province.

Mr Baker, who is touring the Middle East and Europe for a week to confer with regional leaders about the Gulf situation. said Americans must be prepared to "put ourselves in a position where we should be able to exercise any options that might be available". He was due later to meet King Fahd of Saudi Arabia before travelling to Egypt, Turkey, Britain, France and the Soviet Union. He was expected to ask the king to consider possible military options if economic sanctions approved by the United Nations security council fail to drive out Iraqi forces.

The emir said he would prefer his country "liberated today rather than tomorrow" and would not mind if a rescue from Iraqii occupation took place even without the backing of the UN.

According to some reports, Richard Cheney, the US defence secretary, has decided to send Baghad a signal of his continued problem by calling up for Culf duty. resolve by calling up for Gulf duty thousands of "weekend warriors" from reserve combat units in addition to the 34,000 members of support units already deployed. But the Pentagon denied this yesterday, saying no authorisation existed for the call-up of reserves other than a maximum of 48,800 from support units.

COLONEL Sir David Stirling, founder of the SAS, the elite army unit that has ser; ed as a model of unit that has ser; ed as a model of excellence for special forces around the world, died at the London Clinic on Sunday after a long illness. He was aged 74.

Sir David proposed the setting up of a special unit in 1941 while in a Cairo hospital after injuring himself during a parachute jump. Then a 25-year-old lieutenant, he proposed, in a pencil-written note to his superiors, that four-man units should be trained to operate units should be trained to operate behind German lines as saboteurs. His concept of small, highly trained teams working undercover proved highly successful during the Second World War. He added, however, an ingredient that went against the accepted tenets of the against the accepted tenets of the British Army: a rejection of the normal officer/rank hierarchy. Anyone who succeeded in passing the rigid selection test was required to be self-motivated and self-disciplined. To this day officers and men in the SAS address each other using first names. # Single market may hit older British industries, says EC report

From Peter Guilford in Brussels

SPORT 39-44

BRITAIN'S labour-intensive industries could be vulnerable to competition after 1992, according to a European Community analysis of European industry.

After ten years of tough economic medicine, many British companies are as well placed as their rivals to exploit the single European market, and are expected to spread their operations across the Continent in anticipation of

But the lagging performance of Britain's labour-intensive industries could make them more vulnerable when tariffs and other trade barriers finally disappear. In this analysis of the way EC industries are reacting to the single market, Britain is placed firmly among its Northern European partners on the luckier side of a north-south divide.

While the single market is encouraging northern companies to integrate their highly sophisticated economies further without having to move into new sectors, companies from southern Europe are faced with a daunting choice: either to tackle their nothern rivals by breaking into whole new areas of industry, or to consolidate their hold over traditional Henning Christophersen, European commissioner for macro-economic policy, said: "The fear of massive transfers of economic activities between geographic zones is exaggerated." The 350-page report, entitled European Economy — the Impact of the Internal Market, was compiled by Brussels after extensive research with ECstates themselves, and marks the first attempt to detect the concrete effect of 1992 on European industry. Previous reports have been limited to forecasting and speculation, EC officials said.

Companies generating at least half of Britain's employment and added value are described as "sensitive to the completion of the single market". These will be greatly affected by the removal of trade barriers and the influx of new

Preaching revolution: Sir Bryan Nicholson reported progress on skills shortages

A NEW drive to tackle the short-termism dilemma which bedevils relations between the City and industry was un-veiled at the annual conterence of the Confederation of British Industry in Glasgow. Sir Brian Corby, the CBI president who is chairman of the Prudential Corporation, one of the biggest City institutions, has invited City leaders, the trade department and the Bank of England, to set up a steering group to have a fresh attempt at bringing everybody towards a more long-term view for companies and their prospects. It is seen as the best way to boost longer-term planning for industry and more commitment to research. The first day of the conference also saw an initiative announced by Michael Howard, the employment secretary, aimed at lifting the quality of training across British industry to the standards of the best companies.

Sir Bryan Nicholson, head of the CBI education and training affairs committee, re-ported on action to tackle skill shortages. "Many of the seeds necessary for the success of the skills revolution have been planted over the last 12 months. Indeed, I believe that the revolution has begun."

A GROUP of Britain's biggest financial institutions are backing plans to replace the management of Savage Group, the DIY group quoted on the Unlisted Securities Market.

Brian Cox, the former chairman of Camford Engineering, which was taken over by Markheath Securities this year, and merchant bankers at Smith New Court Corporate Finance, have persuaded shareholders controlling 39.8 per cent of Savage's shares to call an extraordinary meeting.

investors will vote on resolutions to remove Nick Savage, the chairman and a grandson of the company's founder. David Stephens, the finance director, and David Brown, the chief executive. The attempted coup represents a toughening of attitudes among Britain's big institutions, who, as the recession tightens, are no longer content to be passive investors

If the move succeeds, Mr Cox hopes to take over the running of the company, with Don Wightman, a former main board director, as chief executive. Also on Mr Cox's team are Pierre de Vos, Savage's former business development manager. Ainsley Newton, a former Savage employee. Chris Wilson, finance ector-elect, and Sir Michael Carlisle. All plan to become directors.

Mr Cox said he had the backing of Norwich Union. Savage's largest investor, with a 9.6 per cent, and the support of AETNA (8.9 per cent), Scottish Mutual (7.2 per cent), Equitable Life (5.5 per cent). Abbey Life (3 per cent) and Scottish Amicable (2.6 per cent). He added that by today he hoped to have the backing of 48 per cent of the shareholders. "Under new legislation. the management have seven weeks in which to call the meeting, but we would hope that they would move aside as quickly as possible," he said.

NatWest and Hill Samuel, its financial advisers. "This has come as a complete surprise," Mr Stephens said. Mr Savage owns 12.9 per cent of the company's shares, and directors hold an additional 5 per cent. The recent performance of Savage shares has been lacklustre. The company has been hit by high interest rates and a slump in high street spending, with many DIY superstores de-stocking to cut their costs. Last month, the company announced a pretax profit of £51,000 for the year to June 30. on sales of £130 million, against £7.29 million the previous year on a £120 million turnover.

After tax, there was a loss per share of 4.8p (9.1p earnings), and the final dividend was cut to 0.5p. making a total of 2p (3.5p). Interest charges were reported as £4.37 million, reflecting borrowings made to fund acquisitions for cash in 1988-89.

Sir Brian emphasised how continuation of investment by industry demanded confidence that the rules were not suddenly going to change or that the exchange rate and in-terest rates were not going to be as volatile as in the past. It also demanded confidence about the national infra-TITLECTURE.

no, not another committee to look at relationships between shareholders and the companies they own. Sir Brian Corby, president of the CBI, thrilled the conference audience in Glasgow with the news that the great and the good are once again being invited to donate a minute or two from their busy schedules to think about how to improve the links between the two sides.

The president did not want a committee, so the new think-in is labelled a "Steering Group", but the casual observer may have difficulty in making the distinction. Helping the CBI at the helm will be the International Stock Exchange, the Association of British Insurers, the National Association of Pension Funds and the International Fund Managers Association, plus the DTI and the Bank of England.

A group such as that will find it easier to disagree than to reach accord, and it seems likely that anything that can be agreed upon will be so anodyne as to be meaningless. Sir Brian does, of roles of chairman and chief course, mean well but he is in a executive and then failed to cleft stick which makes his own if not contradictory. Sir Brian, who spent 30 years inching his way to the top of the Prudential, is by experience more an investor than an industrialist. At the CBI he has to straddle an uncomfortable divide between industry and investor. His experience of largely passive portfolio investment must be invaluable to the CBI's industrial membership, but his loyalties are likely to be divided. But he is well aware that the phrase "corporate governance" is increasingly cropping up at City lunch tables, and this is one of the facets of industrial life that Sir Brian's steering group will be examining. In the last week or two we have seen a couple of examples of institutions exercising their "corporate governance" by forcing from office senior

executives who combined the

deliver. A group of institutions is requisitioning an extraordinary meeting of Savage Group to force out three directors and appoint their own nominees. Other senior executives who have combined the role are lined up in the institutions' sights, and fingers are itchy on the trigger.

Industry needs no steering group, in the wake of those executions, to see the point. Actions have spoken, words are unnecessary. Similarly, the institutions seem to know what they mean by "corporate govern-ance". They want their own man on the board of a company to control, and if necessary sack, the chief executive. The cleanest and simplest way is for the chairman to be responsible to the shareholders, and the management responsible to the board. Funnily enough, as Sir Brian made clear in his speech, he is quite aware of that. So why does he needs a steering committee to state the obvious?

Unity funded

the modest rise in unified Germany's monthly trade surplus in September must not be misread as a sign that Europe's economic superstar can avoid the rapid deterioration in its balance of payments that taking on a crumbling East Germany was bound to cause. The forecasters are still looking for the pan-German current account surplus to be more than halved by next year from last year's DM 105 billion, as more of western German production is directed away from exports towards the troubled former command economy to the east.

Exports from east German industry are meanwhile expected to collapse by next year, as orders signed under the old regime peter out. But for all the trouble and cost of unification, the strength of former West Germany will allow it to continue to run handsome trade surpluses by any standards. despite the dramatic narrowing.

But what of the bill? Critics of the Bonn government claim that in the rush for unity the impact on the German taxpayer was underestimated. Tax increases would have to follow. Theo Waigel, finance minister, disagrees.

While readily acknowledging that the public sector deficit will probably widen next year from this year's DM105 billion, he yesterday told an audience of tax advisers that talk of tax increases was uncalled for. There would, however, be no scope for reducing taxes as a proportion of the gross domestic product below its present 22.5 per cent, its lowest since the late 1950s.

These are not just promises ahead of the all-German elections in December, or commitments along the lines of President Bush's "read my lips" pledge. Bonn has a better record on delivering the beef. Tax revenues should start to improve next year, as turnround in east Germany starts to make itself felt. Herr Waigel is also believed to be planning cuts in federal spending of up to DM40 billion next year, to remove some of the DM100 billion increase in the federal budget this year.

These cuts will not remove the need for increased federal borrowing, which this year jumped a huge DM47 billion to close to DM67 billion. No problem. Continued German surpluses on its external balances, plus the nation's renowned thriftiness, mean Germany can finance its unity quite happily thank you.

THE corporate disaster area politely known as Berisford International casts a long-shadow over Associated Brit-ish Foods, its 24 per cent

The state of the s At present the stake is in ABF's books at about £133 million. But at current prices there is an unrealised loss on the holding of about £100 million. ABF has taken no steps to adjust its balance sheet and will wait until the end of the financial year before taking a view.

By then, the stake may have risen in value due to the auction for British Sugar, Berisford's prize asset, where ABF may bid. The monopolies commission is examining a Tate & Lyle offer and is due to report in January.

While a £100 million writedown would not even dent ABF's balance sheet, its earnings prospects are clouded by the possibility that it may own British Sugar next year. Mean-while, it received no Berisford interim dividend, which in the first half of last year was £2.7 million. In the full year it will be more significant, as the final dividend to ABF totalled £6.5 million last year.

Half-year trading results were distorted by non-trading items. The 19 per cent rise from £111 million to £132 million looked healthy enough but £18 million of the £21 million rise came from net interest receipts. 🕆

Last year's first-half included only three months of income on the sale proceeds of ABF's former holding in Cateway. This year's interims were liatieteg by a nui six months.

Trading was tough, with domestic bread markets and trading profits a mere £2.8 million up at £66.9 million. The full year is likely to bring a modest pre-tax gain from £289 million to about £310 million putting the shares on an 8.5 price/earnings multiple. The shares are a hold until the Berisford issues are resolved.

Prowting

THE housebuilding sector has produced so many truly appalling results that the sight of a profitable survivor is enough to raise a hearty cheer.

On a full valuation this is nearer £150 militon compared to a market capitalisation, on a share price of 153p, of £96.4 million. On profits of £8.25 million this year, the price/earnings ratio of 20 makes Prowting look fully valued, but they should certainly be held.

Renold

THIS time last year, Renold reported a 72 per cent rise in interim profits and a 50 per cent dividend increase. At the full-year, profits were still 32 per cent higher and even though the board suggested slower trading at the annual meeting in July no indication was given about the extent of the shortfall.

That is why the City greeted a 47.5 per cent fall in taxable profits at the interim stage to ust £2.1 million and earnings of 1.9p a share, against 4.6p. with dismay and the shares fell to a new low of 57p. Only a maintained dividend of 1.2p prevented further damage.

A full-blooded recession is developing and any company which suggests that profits are unlikely to recover until late in the next financial year should expect to be hit hard.

In the current year, profits could fall from £9.5 million before tax to just £5 million. from 10.6p a share to 5.3p as a charge which will reflect a greater percentage of earnings from outside Britain. The plus for shareholders is that the decline is not wholly attributable to a slump in demand for industrial chains and switching gear. The com-pany has been busy restructuring operations in Britain. Germany and France and in longer-term substantial cost benefits are anticipated.

The shares trade on a prospective price earnings ratio of I i and on fundamentals should remain morehund until well into next year.

At this level, the company placed predators banking on a recovery but investors should

Airbus said the profit, of which no figure was mentioned, would be shared mong its four partners. France's Aerospatiale and West Germany's Messerschmitt-Boelkow-Blohm each have a 38 per cent stake. #### Self-policing for THF replies on listed companies booking policy

From the chairman of the From the director of corporate Wider Share Ownership communications, Trusthouse Sir, The collapse of Polly Peck International, in circumstances of high indebtedness and controversial treatment of some items in the accounts, throws emphasis on the need for public listed companies to have a self-policing system of self-interested watchdogs. This could be more effective and cheaper than the external system of public watchdogs.

The Wider Share Ownership Council has developed a policy paper describing such a self-policing system, based on research by Dr Maurice Gillibrand. The three self interested groups of watchdogs would be: ! Institutional shareholders; 2. There could be one representative from each category, or two or three, depending on the size of the company. Their different backgrounds and self-interests could create a such as the Rev Ducker competitive environment of watchdogery, as in Germany,

They could meet separately from or sometimes with the board of directors, but they need not have the full powers fitness centres of a German supervisory board. Their minimum essential powers would be:

a) to obtain any information they needed from the com-pany and b) to call a general meeting of the company if they had cause for concern. Yours faithfully, GEORGE COPEMAN, 94 St Paul's Churchyard, EC4 166 High Holborn, WC1.

News Corp shares move skyward as satellite war ends

SHAREHOLDERS of the newly merged British Sky Broadcasting marked the end of the costly satellite television war with a sigh of relief.

Shares of The News Corporation sourced Aus$1.71 to Aus$6.10 overnight in Sydney, while in London, they jumped 65p to 2421/2p. Shares in its subsidiary, News Inter-national owner of The Times, jumped 24p to 125p.

The merger was also good news for BSB's main shareholders, who have had to bear the brunt of rapidlyrising costs that have taken a toll on their stock market ratings. The combined tosses of Sky and BSB have been estimated at about £10 million a week. But as analysts point out, the merger will result in a stronger business, earlier profitability, a wider base for funding and reduced financial

The Chairman, Mr. GARRY WESTON, reports:

The profit before tax for the group has increased by £21.0 million or 19 per cent to £132.3 million. After providing for taxation and minority interests, the profit attributable to the company shows a similar Worldwide sales increased by 8 per cent to £1,367 million whilst the trading surplus was 4 per cent

In the United Kingdom, although sales increased by 8 per cent to £893 million, trading profits at £36.1 million were £2.8 million lower than in the first half of last year. After a reasonable start to the year by our manufacturing companies the profitability of our bakery division suffered erosion through heavy competition and a general fall in bread consumption in part due to prolonged periods of warm weather, a factor which also contributed to relatively poor sales performance from the company's retail bakery and light catering outlets. Whilst the warmer conditions adversely affected our canning operations they were a major factor in the sales and profit growth of our ice cream division. Our retail grocery companies in Northern Ireland, following the adoption of a more aggressive trading profile announced last year, made significant progress and sales and profit growth are in line with forecasts. Overseas sales at £474 million and trading profits of £30.8 million increased by 7 per cent and 22 per cent respectively with currency realignments having minimal effect on these results. George Weston Foods in Australia showed satisfactory results. Sales and operating profits, including some property sales, increased by 6 per cent and 17 per cent respectively, although the continuing rationalisation of the New South Wales bread operations again affected results. Australian results have been converted at 2.26 dollars to the £.

Group investment income has increased by £17.2 million to £67.5 million. A significant element of this increase is that the user are figure investment income has increased by £17.2 million to £67.5 million. A significant element of this increase is that the year ago figure included only three months income on the amount realised from the sale of our investment in the Gateway Corporation in June 1989. The income arising as a result of the increase in the general level of interest rates was offset to some extent by the absence of an interim ordinary dividend from Berisford International.

Whilst we expect a satisfactory performance from our operating divisions for the remainder of the year, the results for the full year will be affected by the trend of interest rates in the United Kingdom and the adverse movement in the Australian exchange rate since the end of the half year. The 19 per cent growth in profits at the half year will not be maintained in the second half, as allowance must be made for the special factor of the income from the Gateway proceeds and the fact that the second half results last year included the larger Berisford final dividend.

As indicated at the time of the 1990 Annual General Meeting we shall be reviewing the value of the investment in Berisford International at the time of the presentation of the full year's results. The adjustment will be dealt with as an Extraordinary Item.

At a Board Meeting today the directors declared a first interim dividend of 3.7p per share (1989 - 3.3p) which, together with the associated tax credit, is equivalent to 4.9p per share (1989 - 4.4p). This interim dividend will be paid on 5 March 1991 to shareholders on the register at the close of business on 1 February

New York BLUE chips showed slim gains in early trading as lower crude oil prices and firmer bonds provided strength.

Dow edges ahead in

The Dow Jones industrial average was 5.20 points ahead at 2,496.04 after slipping to 2.482 at the opening of the session. Gaining shares outpaced declining issues by about two to one. "We should see some carry-

over on the upside from

Friday," said George Pirrone. senior trader at Dreyfus. The average gained about 36 points at the close of last week. He added that with interest rates down slightly and oil prices falling, the climate for buying shares has improved.

Tokyo — Shares closed firmer, but volume was the thinnest since hitting a threeyear low point on August 20. Trade was featureless, with the indices ending modestly higher on the yen's strength and on Friday's gains on Wall Street. "The market started off really strong today, but the early morning rally lost steam because there was really very little out there to sustain buying." said Masahiko Tsuyuzaki, chief trader at Tachibana Securities. The Nikkei index closed 190.34 points, or 0.79 per cent, higher at 24,385.33, with 220 million shares changing hands.

☐ Hong Kong — Share prices closed lower in quiet trading with brokers divided on the likelihood of war in the Gulf. The Hang Seng index eased 11.68 points to 2.967.24 after gaining 19.94 at the opening. Brokers said speculation about a quick end to tension in the Gulf triggered bargain hunting by institutional investors in the morning session. But some selling emerged later in the day from investors with opposing views. ☐ Singapore — Selective sell-ing of shares towards the close of trade eroded early gains. The Straits Times industrial index rose 1.82 points to end at 1.132.92. It reached 1.137.68 at one stage. "Inves-tors were unwilling to take fresh positions due to fears of a war breaking out in the Gulf," one broker said. Sydney - The All-Ordinaries index rose 22 points to 1,313.3, ending nine consecutive falls, while the Ali-Industrials index rose 48.1 points to 1,960.3. The All-Resources index climbed 2.7 points to ☐ Frankfurt — Share prices closed mixed in quiet trading as a lack of follow-up orders wiped out moderate gains recorded at the start of trad-0.63 points higher at 1,414.95. There was no reason for prices tapering off," said one trader, "People are just shoving shares back and forth. Volume is miniscule."(Reuter)

Consumers assured of the benefits of change

Insurers may have to merge to survive the stiff competition that will come with a single European market, Wolfgang Münchau writes

pean" in nature, Different regulations exist for every country, and this is unlikely to change even when the single market comes into effect. Yet, during the next five years, the European insurance industry will go through drastic change as it ecomes more competitive.

The change will be partly a reflection of directives, issued by the European Commission, which try to level the European marketplace, but to a greater extent, a result of trends that are already apparent in Europe. For the industry, the new trend will mean lower margins, which can at best be compensated for by increased business volume. For the consumer, it will mean a better choice and lower premiums. One of the commission's directives, aiready implemented, concerns large risks, which comprise insurance the only genuinely European insurance busi-ness. The other directive companies will benefit allows Europeans to buy non-life personal infrom the surance products anywhere in the European changes that Community, although lie ahead' companies are still prevented from marketing products abroad unless they have permission from the relevant national authority. On their own, however, the two directives, and the few that are to follow, are hardly the stuff that can shake up an entire industry.

Britain has traditionally been Europe's most liberal insurance market, but it is far from clear whether British insurance companies and Lloyd's, the international insurance market based in London, will benefit from the

Germany, by contrast, has tra-ditionally been one of Europe's most protected markets. Regu-lated by the Bundesaussichtsamt für das Versicherungswesen, the Berlin-based authority, insurance represented more a cartel than a genuinely competitive industry.

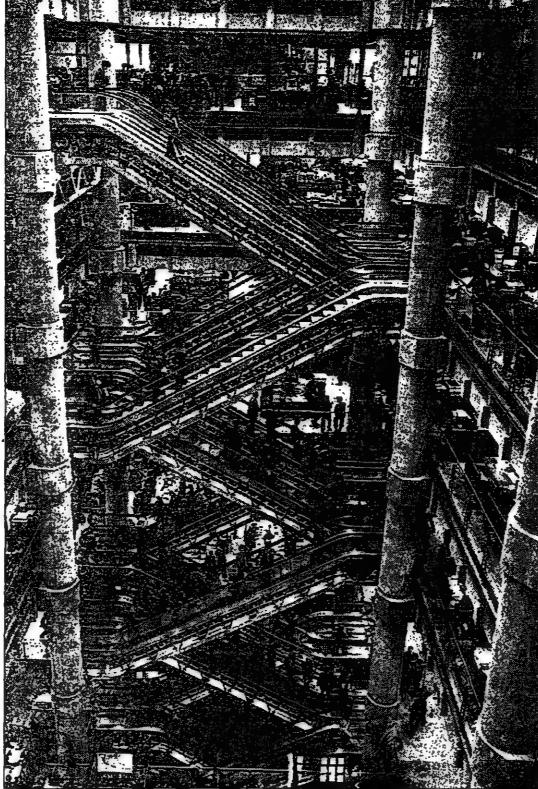

German insurance, however, is changing Allianz, the largest insurer in Europe, is breaking out of the cartel. It has made many acquisitions recently, including the Firemen's Fund in the United States, and, most notably, the British life insurance company.

Assicurazioni Generali, of Italy, is another leading participant

A leading player: Lloyd's, the world's largest insurance market, is already gearing up for the chaeager to improve its market position, perhaps through a linkup with a French company. Zurich Insurance, Europe's second largest group, has also left no doubt about its intention to buy up smaller to medium-sized companies.

Ironically, the decades during which Europe's insurers enjoyed protection have left the continental companies at an advantage. There was never a need to please shareholders, eager for ever higher dividends. Instead, the larger and some of the medium-sized companies are entering the new, and more competitive, decade with their baby fat intact.

The insurance industry of the Nineties will be made up mainly of a group of five or more large companies; one each in Germany, France, Switzerland, Italy and perhaps Britain. There will be a second tier, and then a dwindling number of medium-sized niche companies. Many of the smaller companies will disappear.

Yet, while the structure of the industry will become more European in the next five years, the outlook. Allianz might, by then, pany, and the Prudential may be well established on the continent, but they are likely still to offer a British product in Britain and a French product in France.

Life insurance, which makes up about half the industry, is often linked to national social socurity systems, which, despite the EC's social harmonisation programmes, are unlikely to be standardized for many areas. standardised for many years. • The author is the European Business Correspondent of The Times.

Europe shops for the right policy

EC residents will be able to get quotations

Sir Leon: a liberal line

in any member state as restrictions are lifted

Community's slow lane, policy-making on insurance more flexible methods of overcoming the legal differences between member states, and to a renewed feeling among the more protectionist countries that the enefits of a free insurance trade will eventually outweigh the snags. Action on insurance, however, still lags behind moves to deregulate community trade in other financial services, nombly banking, for which agreement has already been reached on a single barrier-free market across the whole community.

The momentum behind insurance deregulation is due, in no small measure, to the EC's most energetic evangelist for the free holds the financial services portfolio in the commission. At the same time, he has done much to soothe American suspicions that Europe may be building a fortress around its insurance industry. Lord Cockfield, who set the ball rolling, largely by scrapping the cumbersome policy of standardising the 12 national sets of laws down to the smallest detail and replacing it with "mu-tual recognition" of one another's systems. Market forces would press member states to fall into line. Lord Cockfield predicted. The acceleration of EC legislation in insurance and other areas has since proved him right.

Insurance is the area above all others where Britain, backed by its powerful insurance industry, sets the pace in Brussels. Sir Leon and Geoffrey Fitchew, his directorgeneral of financial services, are British. They invariably chivry their more reluctant EC partners to toe the liberal line and agree to throw their protected insurance markets as wide open as possible to cross-border compension, confident that much of that competition will sweep over from

The UK finds its traditional liberal ally in the Dutch, but has frequently faced strong opposition from Germany, where financial services are still cushioned from foreign competition, despite the fler years in the European resilience and openness of the German, economy. The community's southern flank fears its markets may be swamped by is finally picking up speed (Peter markets may be swamped by Guilford writes). This is thanks to strong companies from the north, - and has won substantial periods of grace in several areas.

The thrust of the commission's policy is to ensure that minimum levels of protection exist for the country trusts the rules of all 11 others - and then to throw the community market open to free competition. Theoretically, the policyholder will be free to shop around all 12 countries for the policy whose terms and prices suit him best. Companies will have to compete more fiercely than ever before for his custom

Under the single European insurance market set for 1993, a reputable insurer would no longer need authorisation (frequently disguise) in every country where h passport" issued in his home country Brussels has, however, drawn an important distinc-tion between small-time and big-time : "large-risk"), policyholders. For the time being governments may still "protect" their citizens from buying policies abroad, while large companies can insure themselves more freely all over the commu-nity. This has removed a serious Many of the building blocks for a single market in health, fire, motor and other "non-life" insurance policies are now in place, whereas more controversial plans, such as deregulating life insurance, are still on the commission's designing boards. Independent estimates indicate that the value of life insurance in different countries varies widely, with the Portuguese effectively paying ten times more to insure themselves such as taxation, social security and workers' rights. Brussels has shifted many national obstacles to a free insurance market, but it knows that life insurance will be Allianz's market share in Germany is about 15 per cent. Analysts in London fear that the company's new, more change business culture.

The good old days are fast disappearing. Allianz. the Michael Huttner. a European insurance analyst at BNP country's and Europe's largest Securities, a London broker. insurer, based in Munich, has left no doubt about its intersays: "The big issue is that Allianz is behaving as if it were in the Wild West. They national intentions. At a single stroke, it has secured the have introduced the concept majority of the old East German state insurance monof competition. Analysts believe that the move might depress prof- distribution networks will all its for two or three years, but Wolfgang Schieren, the comholders will benefit, but not pany's chief executive, says insurance companies.

Competition is fiercest in the commercial large-risk market. Here Mr Huttner are "30 per cent below what they should be". It is likely that the Bundesaussichtsamt will soon end this by forcing insurance companies to split accounts for personal and commercial business to avoid cross-subsidies. At present, the small man subsidises the risk of the big one.

The other development that will sharpen competition in Germany is the arrival of the banks. Dresdner Bank and Allianz have formed a strategic alliance in some of the Lander, by which Dresdner Bank distributes insurance policies through its branch network. This move is one of the most significant changes to the distribution part of the business, which has long been dominated by the foot-in-thedoor insurance salesman. Banks may soon offer their own insurance policies. Most insurance companies have used the years in which they were protected against compention to their aggressive policy, and the advantage. Reserves are genarrival of sometimes ruinous erally large. The capital base price competition is about to behind German insurance companies will also be their greatest asset in the consolidation process widely expected to take place in the European insurance industry...

Germany is the European country in which this radical change is most evident. Allianz is likely to emerge as the most aggressive predator. It already owns Combill insurance, and in 1986 it attempted an ill-fated bid for Eagle Star.

British plan continental niche

Getting a foot in the door across the Channel is difficult, but lucrative

The advent of the single European market has A presented Britain's insurers with a problem. All agree they should expand on to the Continent, and believe they can offer attractive products. The government and the trade department have exborted life assurers to cross the Channel (Neil Bennett writes).

The prospects do appeal. Even in developed life assurance markets, products are surprisingly unsophisticated. Unit-linked policies, for example, are almost unbeard of in Germany. In much of southern Europe, life assur-ance investment is still in its infancy. While there are opportunities, however, in both life and non-life markets, insurers are finding them difficult to exploit. After a series of heavy claims and poor results, most British composites have neither the will, nor the re-sources, to look for expensive continental acquisitions. The alternative is to set up greenfield operations and expand them organically, but insurers are then faced with the problems of distribution. Without an effective sales force, it is futile for newcorners, no matter how superior their products, to compete against the estab-lished national insurers.

The largest British-con-trolled insurers in continental Europe are Delta Lloyd in The Netherlands, part of Commercial Union, and Albingia, Guardian Royal Exchange's subsidiary in Germany. Both supply between 10 and 15 per cent of their parent's premium income. However, neither company is the spearhead of a recent decision to expand on to the Continent. They were acquired before a single European market was even a Commercial Union is the most European-minded of the British composites, apart from Delta Lloyd, which is the third largest Dutch insurer. Commercial Union bought L'Epargne de France, a life assurer and savings group, in 1984 and since then it has formed a policy of no acquisitions, instead opening new subsidiaries in Spain, Italy and Greece. Commercial Union is also trying to establish a strong distribution network for its subsidiaries through a series of strategic alliances. Last year, it signed an agreement with Credito Italiano, the Italian bank, to offer life and non-life policies through the latter's 503 branches. It is also selling policies through Crédit Maritime in France.

Other continental ventures

The risks of Europe: GRE lost £46 million after investing in Italian motor insurance year, GRE bought a half-share of Sidas and Cipea, two Italian motor insurers, for £27 million. They lost £19.7 million, and this increased to £46 million in the first half of 1990, after GRE discovered a £30 million shortfall in the companies' reserves.

Some insurers are already in retreat. Last month, Eagle Star announced it was selling its French, non-life insurance subsidiary. Eagle Star France earned annual premiums of £24 million, but was a consisblamed intense competition.

Given the pitfalls of acquisitions, composites are trying to find a lower-cost route

June, Sun Alliance and several underwriting syndicates in Lloyd's insurance market formed a joint venture called Eurosure. This is designed to take advantage of the EC's second non-life insurance directive, which came into force at the beginning of July. The directive allows all balance-sheet of more than 12.4 million ecus (£8.68 miltion) and at least 500 employees to buy insurance anywhere services. Greece, Ireland, Portugal and Spain are exempted for several years. Eurosure will be marketed to continental customers. In through Lloyd's largest brokers, including Sedgwick and Willis Faber & Dumas, Despite this, it expects to take premiums of only £50 million in the next three years, which is insignificant in terms of the size of the market.

Eurosure is an implicit admission by Lloyd's that its continental European busi-European businesses with a ness is too small. Only 10 per cent of the £5.25 billion of market premiums last year came from the Continent, a quarter the size of business in the community, as part of from America. In addition, the EC's policy of freedom of more than half of this was more than half of this was introduced as reinsurance for large continental groups. But Lloyd's believes it can play a niche role in Europe.

FRENCH insurers are unrivalled in Europe for their ageression and ambition. The large groups have committed their home market and competing effectively in Europe, often from a very modest base (Neil Bennett writes).

This year, however, the industry has paused for breath, following three years of complex acquisitions that have reshaped France's domestic market and given the leading insurance groups a substantial market share

The process started in 1987, with Compagnie du Midi's acquisition of Equity & Law. A year later, Compagnie du Midi became a takeover viatim itself, as Axa Group won control. The corporate manoeuvres have slowed down this year while the insurance groups

The insurers are also seeing a slowdown in the frenzied mid Eighties. witzerland is an insurance salesman's dream. The Swiss spend more on insurance as a percentage of gross national product than any other people in the world. Last year, total premium incomes in the republic amounted to about 50 billion Swiss francs (£20 billion). Switzerland, although one of Europe's smallest countries, accounts for an extraor-dinary 12 per cent of Europe's insurance market.

The Swiss insurance market, however, is far from saturated. Percentage growth for the industry has remained in double figures.

The country has two of Europe's top ten insurance companies, Zurich Insurance and Winterthur, and 120 smaller insurance companies. Despite their strong home bese, Swiss insurance companies have traditionally been very active abroad. Insurance premium income from foreign operations, including those of foreign subsidiaries, is believed to be worth more than 40 billion Swiss francs (£16

Italians spend 66 per cent ess than Britons, per head of he population, on insurance. Assicurazioni Generali, which has its headquarters in Trieste - the birthplace of talian insurance - is the fifth largest insurance company in Europe, coming after Allianz of Germany, Zurich In-surance: Union des Assur-

foreign companies that want to increase their market

The smaller, life side is a different story. Heady annual expansion of 30 per cent in the Eighties has subsided to 15-16 per cent. Many companies; such as Alleanza, Generali's life subsidiary - not to be confused with Allianz - have revamped their range of products, to be more in line with international trends. THE Netherlands is the big-gest and the most liberal insurance market of the three Benefux countries, and the one best prepared for the ingle markeL

Dutch insurers' expansion plans within the European Community have been largely frustrated, however. by protectionism in other European countries.

Nevertheless, it is two Benelux insurance companies which have created the "first full cross-border merger' within the EC. In March, Amey, The Netherlands' third largest insurer, and Groupe AG, the Belgian market lead-er, announced their intention to merge, although they are still waiting for approval from the EC commission. The merger was couched in terms of expanding into the 1993 single market, but it must be seen more as a defence mechanism. Predators looking for a Benelux acquisition will now have to pay more for Amev/AG.

in October Interpolis Verzekeringen, the insurance subsidiary of Rabobank, the Dutch bank, signed a partnership agreement with three other European insurers that have links with the agriculture sector: Raiffeisen und Volksbanken Versicherungen of Germany, Les Assurances Mutuelles Agricoles of France and the Belgische Boerenbond. This enables each to set up operations in the others' countries.

Both the Belgian and Dutch insurance markets are highly concentrated, making it difficult for foreign newcomers to build up market share, in Belgium, expansion is doubly difficult because of stringent rules governing new policies

But there is a new impulse driving both markets, following the abolition in both of legislation commercial links between banks and insurers.

Four-point plan for justice

The need to improve access to justice is one of the great issues of our time. A system of justice is not worthy of the name if any section of the community is excluded from it for any reason. It is unacceptable to have a large group of people who cannot afford to go to law.

In December 1989 the Lord Chancellor's Legal Aid Advisory Committee said: "The issue of eligibility for legal aid has long been a concern of the committee ... although [the] evidence on the relative fall of the eligibility level is indirect. It is consistent and

A study by Michael Murphy, of the London School of Economics, suggests that 14.8 million people and 5.5 million households have become ineligible for civil legal aid since 1979.

in March a joint letter from the Bar Council and the Law Society to the Lord Chancellor reflected the legal profession's increasing concern about this decline, and the Lord Chancellor's review of the financial conditions for legal aid is considering the issue of

The government says gross expenditure on legal aid in the last financial year was £715 million. This figure calls for careful examination. The net cost is £594 million. Criminal legal aid accounts for £282 million, nonmatrimonial civil legal aid for £76

Too many are denied civil legal

million and matrimonial civil legal aid for £71 million. These net figures include 15 per cent VAT and should be reduced accordingly.???

It is hardly surprising that the cost of criminal legal aid has risen. Between 1984 and 1989 the number of defendants who received legal aid for crown court trials rose from about 105,000 to 132,000. Expenditure on criminal legal aid is inevitably demand-led. The rise in unit costs reflects the increasing complexity of criminal cases. The creation of the Serious Fraud Office and the use by the prosecution of advanced technology must reflect this complexity, but no statistics are available.

Criminal and civil legal aid should be considered separately. Those who require civil legal aid should not suffer because the cost of criminal legal aid has risen. It is necessary to focus attention on eligibility for civil legal aid, and in particular the 14.8 million people who have become ineligible for it since 1979.

The legal profession has its part to play. We need to continue to fight those old enemies, cost and delay. The assessment of costs by LEGAL BRIEF an independent court official in civil legal aid cases gives the taxpayer appropriate protection. Arrangements for payment in civil legal aid cases are such that after a case has been running for 18 months 46 per cent of the fees will be paid on account.

Such arrangements impose an appalling financial strain on young barristers and would not be accepted by any commercial any solicitors and barristers give a great deal of time to initiatives ∟that are aimed at filling gaps in the legal aid system. For example, the Bar's Free Representation Unit has handled more than 1,000 cases in tribunals without charge this year. The clients in these cases would otherwise have been unrepresented, as legal aid is still not available for tribunals or arbitrations. Urgent action is required to remedy the difficulties faced by the large section of the population who cannot afford to go to law. I have four proposals:

1. The government should restore legal aid eligiblity at least to the levels of 1979. The Lord Chancellor's Legal Aid Review is looking at ways of meeting the financial needs of those now ineligible. The eligiblity limits could be removed or raised, or operated more flexibly in individual cases.

2. There is an urgent need to develop alternative dispute resolution. The Bar Council's proposals for a pilot scheme to provide conciliation in non-matrimonial county court cases have yet to be accepted by the government. There is a great opportunity to develop new procedures for the early and cost-effective disposal of civil cases. 3. The Bar Council has reaffirmed the Bar's commitment to undertake legal aid work within a barrister's particular field of practice. A similar rule should apply to all advocates. I hope this will be accepted by all advocates seeking extended rights of audience. If it is not, the Courts and Legal Services Act can achieve this.

4. Computer facilities should be installed in all civil courts to reduce delay.

We must ensure that ordinary people have the same access to justice, including the same quality of representation, as that available to the big battalions. Implementing the four proposals I have made would help to achieve this goal. The author is chairman of the Bas

Council applied wrong test in assessing intentional homelessness

Regina v Newham London Borough Council, Ex parte Tower Hamlets London Borough Council

Before Lord Donaldson of Lymington, Master of the Rolls. Lord Justice Balcombe and Lord Justice Taylor Liudement October 191

In deciding whether or not an applicant for housing had acted reasonably in leaving his accommodation for the purposes of determining his intentional or unintentional homelessness under section 60 of the Housing Act 1985, a local authority should have regard to his former accommodation in the context of accepted standards within that local community, and should not compare that accommodation with the housing stan-dard of the area to which he had

Further, where one local authority falled to apply that test come to the United Kingdom and also falled to take account of from Bangladesh in 1972.

it decided to refer the applica-tion for housing under section 67 of the 1985 Act, its decision as fatally flawed.

The Court of Appeal so held dismissing Newham London Borough Council's appeal from the Divisional Court (Lord Justice Watkins and Mr Justice Nolan) (The Times March 15) which had granted Tower Hamlets London Borough Council's application for judicial review and quashed Newham's decision referring to Tower Hamlets a housing application made by Mr Rashid Ullah under section 67 of the 1985 Act.

Mr David Watkinson for Newham: Mr Ashley Under-wood and Miss Lucy Theis for Tower Hamlets; Mr Ullah was esent or represented.

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS said that Mr Ullah had housing shortages within returning there to his wife and lived in accommodation which was later described as conforming with the accepted standards in Bangladesh.

He had given up his home there in 1986 returning to England with his family and staying with his son in Tower Hamlets. His family had ex-panded and in 1987 he was required to leave that accommodation and to apply to Tower Hamlets for housing assistance under Part III of the 1985 Act. His Lordship set out the detailed consideration given to his application by that local authority, which concluded that although he was homeless and with a priority need, he was nevertheless intentionally

Mr Ullah had then applied for housing assistance to Newham. That authority had agreed with Tower Hamlets on the first two considerations but concluded that he was unintentionally homeless, and had a local connection with Tower Ham-lets. Newham therefore referred his application to Tower Hamlets under section 67.

The test as to intentional homelessness was derived from section 60 of the Act. Although the Act was only concerned with homelessness within Great Britain, the relevant enquiry was not to be confined to events only occurring within the United Kingdom. What was in issue was why the applicant became homeless here.

His Lordship referred to the voluntary acts whereby Mr Ullah had left his accommodation in Bangladesh and come to Tower Hamiets. The essential his conduct was reasonable.

Tower Hamlets' decision had been reached after an appro-priate consideration of the relevant matters, including that his accommodation in Bangladesh was settled and conformed with accepted standards there. His Lordship referred to the

His Lordship considered that it was a most undesirable result that two different tribunals investigating questions of fact had reached different conclusions. He considered why in the present case that had been so, in particular that Newham had not considered the basis and reasons for Tower Hamlets' decision. Had it done so, it would have discovered that different criteria had been applied and doubtless would have considered whether Tower Hamlets had adopted the correct approach which it should follow.

Mr Uliah was not just moving

A relevant factor in judging the reasonableness of that decision was whether the accommodation which he was giving up conformed to the accepted standards of the community into which he had been born and had lived for most of his life. That was not to say that the manifest deficiencies of that accommodation were irrele-vant, but they had to be seen in the context of judging the reasonableness of his decision. Tower Hamlets, but not Newham, took that context into

Mr Ullah's prospect of employment the United King-dom was another factor of great relevance which was taken into account by Tower Hamlets, but not, it seemed by Newham.

The vice of the system was though Newborn might well not have appreciated that. The investigation as to whether the referral conditions existed was entrusted to the officer who had investigated the facts of Mr Ullah's application. On her conclusion that the conditions were met, the referral seemed to have been made without further discussion or consideration. His Lordship referred to the Divisional Court's consideration of Newham's failure to have regard to general housing. conditions in Tower Hamlets. That court, quashing the refer-ral, had concluded that that factor should have been considered, and that Newham's decision, reached solely by reference to its own determination on unintentional homelessness and without re-gard to Tower Hamlets' refusal to accept Mr Ullah as unintenhousing shortage in Tower Hamlets, could not be justified.

His Lordship considered that the Divisional Court's order could be upheld on broader grounds.

If there were to be a referral.

the referring authority had to be satisfied of the matters set out in section 67(1). While its decision could not be appealed, it could not found a referral if it was flawed to an extent and in respects which in appropriate judicial review proceedings would lead to its being quashed. Newham's decision was so flawed in that it failed to take account of the general flousing circumstances prevailing in Tower Hamlets, and instead took account of those in Newham; that it fuiled to consider the extent to which Mr Ullah's Bangladesh accommodation standards: that it failed to take account of his employment prospects, and to ascertain and consider Tower Hamlets rea-sons for holding that he was intentionally homeless. Had Newham approached that latter question as it should have done, it was highly likely that it would have reached the same conclusion as Tower

Good administration and comity between local authorities demanded that in exercising a power, such as contained in section 67, the authority should take full account of the prevailing general housing circum-sunces in both areas and should give serious consideration to whether, notwithstanding that referral conditions were me the public interest required that the rehousing should be under taken by it rather than by the other authority.

Importance of ancestor in citizenship

Regina v Secretary of State for Affairs, Ex parte Ross-Clunis Before Lord Justice Purchas, Lord Justice Glidewell and Lord Justice Stuart-Smith [Judgment October 12]

The word "ancestor" in section 32(7) of the British Nationality Act 1948 included a father. Therefore, a person born out-side a Dominion country before the 1948 Act came into force, whose father was born in a Dominion country and whose paternal grandfather was born in England, was not deemed to be a different was not deemed to be citizen of that Dominion country under section 32(7) but became a citizen of the United Kingdom and Colonies under section 12(4) of the Act. Accordingly, such a person became a British citizen under the British Nationality Act 1981.

The Court of Appeal so stated

The Court of Appeal so stated allowing an appeal by the ap-plicant, Mr Nicholas John Ross-Clunis, from a decision of Mr Justice Kennedy given on November 17, 1989 whereby he dismissed the applicant's application for a declaration that he was a British citizen.

The applicant's paternal grandfather was born in England and his father in Capetown. In 1936 the father married the applicant's mother, a British subject born in Cyprus. The applicant was born in Athens on July 6. 1948 and his birth was red with the British Consul in Athens by his father. The applicant lived in Cyprus where he spent most of his life.
Section 1 of the 1948 Act

provides: "(3) The following are

Section 12 of the 1948 Act provides: (4) A person who was a British subject immediately before the date of the commencement of this Act and does not become a citizen of the United Kingdom and Colonics by virtue of any of the foregoing provisions of this section shall on that date become such a citizen unless - (a) he is then a citizen of any country men-tioned in subsection (3) of section 1 of this Act under a country mentioned in sub-section (3) of section 1 of this Act". Section 32 provides: "(7) A person shall, in relation to any country mentioned in sub-section (3) of section I of this Act in which a citizenship law has not taken effect at the date of commencement of this Act, be deemed for the purposes of this Act to be potentially a citizen of that country at that date if he, or his nearest ancestor in the male line who acquired British natime who acquired pritish na-tionality otherwise than by rea-son of his parentage, acquired British nationality by any of the following means, that is to say (a) by birth within the territory comprised at the date of the commencement of this Act in that country . . . . "

Mr Desmond Keane, QC. Mr Alper Riza and Mr Gerard McCoy for the applicant; Mr Guy Sankey for the secretary of state.

LORD JUSTICE GLIDEWELL said that the tatute now in force, the British Nationality Act 1981 in-troduced the concept of British citizenship as distinct from the status of a British subject.

The applicant's position was governed by section 11 which provided that a person who immediately before commencement of the Act was a citizen of the United Kingdom and Colonies should at commencement become a British citizen.
Thus the question was whether the applicant was at the date when the 1981 Act came into force a citizen of the UK and Colonies. That depended on the previous legislation, namely the British Nationality Act 1948. The list of countries set out in section 1(3) were countries which at the date the Act was passed constituted the British Dominions.

ish Dominions.

The applicant claimed that he became a citizen of the UK and Colonies by virtue of section 12(4). The applicant was not born in South Africa, therefore, and did not aconime British he did not acquire British chizenship law having effect in nationality by burth in that that country...or (b) he is then country.

The issue before the judge and on appeal was whether the applicant's nearest ancestor in the male line acquired British nationality otherwise than by reason of his parentage. When the 1948 Act came into force. British subjects who had been born or whose fathers had been born in the UK and Colonies became citizens of the UK and Colonies: section 12(1) and (2). Thus sections 12(4) and 32(7) of the 1948 Act were concerned with British subjects who did not come within either.

section [2(1) or (2), but who, might potentially be citizens of section 1(3) countries, the then Since it was relevant under under section 12(2) to consider a father's place of birth, it seemed to his Lordship that it was equally relevant to consider the father's national status for the purposes of sections 12(4) and 32(7). Thus, in his Lordship's view, the word "ancestor" in his context was apt to include "father". The applicant submitted that the "British nationality" to which section 32(7) referred. must, in relation to the father, mean his citizenship of the UK and Colonies. The father acquired that nationality by reoson of his parentage, that is, because his father, the grand.

father, was born in England, Thus, it was argued, the father did not come within the words ing of section 32(7). It followed therefore that the applicant was not deemed by virtue of section 32(7) to be potentially a citizen of South Africa, and thus by section 12(4) became a citizen of the 112 and College of the 112

the UK and Colonics on January 1, 1949. His Lordship had not found that an easy point to decide but in the end concluded that the applicant's submission was cor-

Into the heart of Europe

As the continental market grows, two British law firms are poised to take on the Germans on their own ground, Edward Fennell writes

ritish fondness for self-criticism sometimes gets in the way of a true appreciation of our strengths. In the case of law, that means pausing occasionally from carping about solicitors and giving them credit for being the most enterprising, flexible and dynamic lawyers in Europe.

Evidence for this will come next week when the City firm Freshfields opens its office in Frankfurt. Clifford Chance is already there but only in association with a German firm. The Freshfields development is the first independent initiative by a leading London firm to get a tochold in the German market.

By going boldly into the heart of Germany's commercial community Freshfields has set out on a course - whether perilous or profitable remains to be seen - to challenge German firms on their own

"I expect that within ten years our Frankfurt office will be of the same size and status as our Paris office is today." says Julian Francis, who is to head the new enterprise. It is an ambitious boast because Freshfields' Paris office is one of the top six firms in the French capital and has a reputation for excellence independent of its London parent. If Freshfields does achieve its goal, however, it will represent an astonishing success for the British

way of running legal services.
According to Dr Peter Opitz, the German lawyer and former banker who will help to open the Frankfurt office, the leading German law firms are having to move fast to make up for lost time. With lead unification, the reform of the legal profession in Germany and increasing emphasis on the country's role as Europe's leading economy, the law firms are expanding to match the ambitions of their industrial and commercial clients.

To win business in such an environment Freshfields is carefully cultivating a pan-European image Although there is no doubt that the firm's international headquarters are in London, Freshfields in Frankfurt will have a cosmopolitan atmosphere, with French as well as German and British lawyers in the office from next Monday. This multinational team will be the attraction for a large amount of cross-border work.

"We are aiming to do a lot of international mergers and acquisition work, joint venture work, as well as pure corporate finance and project financing in eastern Germany," Dr Opitz explains. "We shall be able to do all of it within the same office - nobody else in Germany will be able to do So the question is whether such

"one-stop Euro shopping" will tempt clients away from established German firms. Naharro Nathanson is equally ambitious when it comes to Germany but is working through tight network relationships. It already has its German associates, Raedler Raupach & Partners, an from next January it is merging with the Berlin firm of Bezzenberger, Mock, Zatzsch & Partners. At the same time it is formalising its association with Lambert Grohman & Kerres, an Austrian commercial law practice, which also has an office in Budapest. In this way, according to partner Brian Clark, Nabarro Nathanson will reach into

"At the moment we are going for strong bilateral relationships with firms on the continent," Mr Clark says. "Once we have those in place then it may be appropriate to think in terms of extending those to become multilateral."

No doubt there is room for both approaches. But each has its risks. Dr Opriz says his experience in the banking world suggests that net-works, ultimately, do not thrive, while Nabarro Nathanson argues that Freshfields will lose goodwill by steaming into Germany with its ambitions too clearly on display. Whichever turns out to be right, the European future of British lawyers may depend on these ventures.

the first meeting of a working party to examine the causes and extent of parental child abduction and to recommend changes in the law to deal with the problem was held at the House of Commons last week. Reunite, the National Council for Abducted Children, says the incidence of kidnapping by a parent after marriage breakdown is increasing, and ease of travel has increased the opportunities. A group of lawyers in the working party will meet in the next 12 months to consider improvements to the law. A separate group will consider how a profile of the typical abductor can be built up. to help judges making orders on custody and access. Reunite says abduction often occurs when the court has thought the non-custodial parent is unlikely to abduct and has therefore made an access order giving ample opportunity for kidnapping.

hat is happening to the Law Society? Is it the presidency of Tony Holland or something in the tea? Hardly a day goes by when the public are not regaled with a strong and carefully considered statement on a pressing question of legal policy. There are calls for a more humane jail system and a prompt analysis of the new proposals on child maintenance and divorce, and concern over the apparent loss of an important remedy for tenants in the Environmental Bill. The solicitors' professional body, which for a long time has been regarded as little more than a trade union, with particular skill in representing its members' own interests, clearly has the potential to become an influential reforming voice.

eanwhile, the more routine business of publishing the Law Society's annual statistics continues. This year's revealed there are now 4.5 per cent more solicitors than last year and that women make up 47 per cent of new entrants and 23 per cent of solicitors on the roll. Central London is absorbing more trainee solicitors than ever (42 per cent compared with 30 per cent in 1985-86) and more than half of all solicitors' firms are concentrated in the southeast. The profession as a whole turned over almost £4.5 billion in the year to March 31, 1990—18 per cent more than in the previous year. This could ensure that the popularity of solicitors will not shoot up dramatically, despite a few hard-hitting press releases.

egal aid firm Deacon Goldrein Green has notched up another mark against its rivals with an expansion of its 13/office network in Liverpool to 20 across Merseyside. This makes DGG the largest one-firm network of high-street, legal aid practitioners in Britain. With the acquisition of the Wirral practice of Gearing & Wilde, DGG's total staff is now 250. DGG is already a firm that other legal aid practitioners love to hate. At a time when lawyers were practing the difficulties of making ends mast on legal aid for DGG time chousing the making ends meet on legal aid fees, DGG was showing that such work, done in bulk, can pay. The Lord Chancellor's officials were sufficiently impressed to pay a visit. David Deacon, a senior partner, says: "We consider the Wirral as the natural springboard to establishing a major regional presence within a very short time." He says DGG will bring its aggressive marketing style and effective systems" into increasingly diverse areas of work.

It is no secret how much American lawyers want a big slice of the European cake, and the New York giant Shearman & Sterling will help itself to a choice piece when it moves into Germany in the new year with offices in Frankfurt and Dusseldorf. Its competitors may be interested to note that the new branch offices will be practising German, American and European Community law, The appropriation of local lawyers is the most promising route to European penetration for American firms, and Shearman has captured a senior German lawyer, Georg Thoma, from the Dasseldorf firm Galler Meyer-Landrat Miller to head its German operation.

Raising the roof over rent reviews

NOBODY should underestimate the importance of rent reviews. Asset values are at stake and, in marginal cases, the solvency of the company may turn on the outcome. It is not surprising that rent reviews are a fertile ground for litigation. What may be surprising is the extent to which some people are prepared to press seemingly unrealistic arguments.

One of the most popular games for tenants is taking up abstruse points with a view to delaying the entire procedure. If the new rent does not have to be paid until the rent review is settled, although it will be applied remospectively once a settlement is achieved, the tenant thereby gains a substantial cash flow advantage.

In one case the lease stated that the landlord had only a limited time to make an application for the appointment of an independent surveyor to fix the review. The landlord's agents applied but in their letter they said they did not want the surveyor to take any immediate action, so that there was further opportunity to negotiate. The tenants claimed that this addition invalidated the application. When this argument was rejected by the High Court, the tenants took it to the Court of Appeal, gaining an extra two years' delay. The rent review of 1984 was thus postponed until 1987. The trustee landlords, Montague Executor and Trustee Company, were the heart of middle Europe.

The most famous example of this. now on its way to a fifth court hearing, this time in the House of Lords, turns on whether the rent should be valued on the basis that there will be regular future rent reviews or on the hypothetical basis that there will be no rent review for the next 20 years. The advantage of a lease without rent reviews is obvious and tenants are assumed to be happy to pay a higher reat to avoid future reviews.

In the particular case involving accountants Arthur Young a nuance in the relevant clause allowed the landlords to argue that the valuation should ignore the fact that the lease provided for future rent reviews. The landlords claimed that world of "make believe" on terms quite different from those of the actual lease. This argument was upheld by the judge, and a quirk in arbitration law prevented rights of appeal, so the tenants were stuck for rent of £200,000 above the true market figure. The present litigation turns on whether the case is capable of being re-litigated.

What are we to do? The key advice is to check the least well in advance, approximately 18 months before the review. It is usually easier to sort out potentially expensive problems before the heat of battle brings with it the entrenchment of opposing views. JOHN SAMSON The author is a partner at Nabarro Nathansan and editor of Property Law Bulleum.

Your main responsibilities will be dealing with the Council's heavy but varied Magistrates and County Court workload together with assisting in the supervision and management of the section, including dealing with civil and criminal litigation and planning matters, especially enforcement which will involve advocacy at public inquiries.

In order to maintain and improve the services provided to the community, we are looking for an individual not only with relevant experience in advocacy but also with the enthusiasm and motivation to achieve results and make a positive contribution to the wide range of issues facing a progressive authority.

You will be working in a pleasant environment with minim supervision, but with the support of a small and friendly legal ream.

With three Magistrates Courts and five County Court areas to cover you will have ample opportunity to enjoy the areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty which make up a large part of the District. Wealden offer a competitive salary, together with a generous package including an executive level car. private health insurance and screening, performance bonus, childcare benefits and a superb relocation package. We are happy to consider candidates wishing to job-share for this position. For an informal discussion please contact the Solicitor Mr Vic

Scarpa on 0892 602440.

For details ring our 24 hour service - (0892) 663867 or write to Wealden Personnel Services, Wealden District Council, Pine Grove, Crowborough, East Sussex TN6 1DH. Ref: D002. Closing date: 16th November 1990.

Advance as an individual. In International Finance.

Closer links between the major financial centres of the world, the predominance of multi-national companies, the changing political shape of Europe – all these factors influence the role of the international finance lawyer.

At Linklaters & Paines, our work covers securities issues and syndicated banking transactions together with other financial products; commercial paper and swaps. To many qualified lawyers, the work will be a new experience, but the opportunities we offer are not limited to those with a banking or financial background.

Our team approach is tailor-made for young energetic lawyers who want to discover more about the work. By working closely with people who have considerable experience in the field, you will acquire a set of skills which will help you secure a successful future. You will also find that encouragement and recognition come quickly to those who want to use their individual skills and imagination.

Take your first step to success in International Finance Law by contacting Janet Lewis on 071-606 7080, or by writing to her at Linklaters & Paines, Barrington House, 59-67 Gresham Street, London EC2V 7JA

OPPORTUNITIES IN NORWICH UNION INSURANCE PENSIONS & LITIGATION

Our client, Norwich Union Insurance, is one of the largest financialservices institutions in the U.K. and also one of the biggest investors in commercial property. As such, it has a powerful team of lawyers comprising 31 solicitors and 20 legal executives - which consistently handles work of outstanding quality.

PENSIONS

Vacancies now exist in the Life and Pensions Business Department for recently-qualified solicitors and barristers and those of longer experience. A relevant background is desirable but candidates of proven intellect and ability - who can adapt - will also be considered. A varied workload will include highly-creative elements such as originating new pensions products, together with counselling independent financial advisers, drafting and so on.

Applications are also invited from well-qualified contentious specialists. Exposure to property-related disputes would be particularly useful, ideally upwards of 2 years', but those with broad experience of commercial litigation are also encouraged to apply; certainly, the overall calibre of candidates will be as important as precise background.

Remuneration for these posts will be very competitive - reflecting our client's policy of competing for the best-available talent - and will include a comprehensive large-company package. Appointees will also benefit from the attractive Norwich location and surrounding countryside.

For further information please telephone Philip Boynton, LL.B., LL.M., on 071-405 6852 or write to him at Reuter Simkin Limited, Recruitment Consultants, 5 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London EC4A 1DY.

AMBERS & PARTNERS

A Significant Following

Solicitors from small firms tend to be at a disadvantage when competine for jobs with solicitors from the larger firms. Their c.v.s lack the eacher of a Linklaters or a Slaughter & May. In the thin job-market of today, however, they often have one particular advantage over the largefirm solicitors: and that is their personal client following. Solicitors from the giant City firms are rarely in a position to bring work with them when they move. They bring their connections, of course, and the potential for building up a practice on this basis, but the allegiance of the large blue-chip corporation is to the firm rather than the individual. With the small firm, on the otherhand, the allegiance of clients is likely to be to their individual solicitor. Small-tirm solicitors, especially those whose practice is noncontentious, can often promise a personal following to the value of, sav, £50,000 to £200,000.

Twelve months ago, when most firms had more business than they could handle, an average following was nugreat attraction. Today it can make all the difference. We have many firms on our books in all parts of the country (including wellknown medium-steed firms) asking us to keep them informed of candidates who can bring work with them in almost any discipline. It is becoming an important part of our job. therefore, to help candidates analyse their personal followings and prepare a fair summary for presentahen the Queen laun-ches the RRS James Clark Ross, a new £35 million ship designed for polar exploration, next month, she will be marking the end of an anniversary year celebrating 25 years of research by the Natural Environment Research Council.

The ship will join four others in the council's fleet, which provides a platform for marine science investigations and helps to supply its five Antarctic research stations.

The council was studying the environment and training scientists to work in this field long before it became a popular issue. This year it is spending £33 million on its research centres, training postgraduate scientists and encouraging environmental studies in higher education.

The council offers a wide array of opportunities to those who want to do something about the environment instead of merely being involved in rhetoric, and to the people who are attracted by the idea of studying the environment as scientists to understand the mechanisms that cause it to

More than 2,500 staff are employed at the research centres and this year the council is also providing the finance for 290 students to start postgraduate research projects related to the environment in British universities. A further 206 awards are being given to finance students doing advanced courses in the environmental sciences

"One goal is to understand how the ocean varies from year to year, decade to decade." Mr King says. "We have made measurements in the Atlantic on cruises in the Bay of Biscay. We chose a place where the upper ocean is well mixed in winter and warm on the surface in summer. Our measurements were an attempt to detect signals of climatic change as far as 500 metres down into the sea. We know the water on top absorbs carbon dioxide from the air, then mixes deeper in the ocean and moves south.

"My experiments are designed to find out whether the ocean can absorb carbon dioxide fast enough to regulate the greenhouse effect. "We measure the water tem-perature to a few thousandths of a degree and the salinity to three parts per million. Our two main techniques are lowering in-struments while the ship is stationary and taking measurements down to the sea bed, or using an instrument that cycles between the surface and 350 metres as it is towed along.

"My work is funded by National Power, which has given me a five-year followship. On the ship I have 15 soloutists, who run the in-strainents and help to collect data.

"In the laboratory I am analys-ing the results largely on my own. I mutied meths and first spectraics at university. This project is ideal for me because it combines. my interest and expertise."

Time for inquisition as highest hopes fade in frustration

From RICHARD BURNELL IN TASMANIA

THE long journey home from Tasmania will give members of the British team in the Soviet Union. world championships ample time to contemplate the results. Hopes were so high, the outcome so frustrating.

To reach eight grand finals out of the 14 events in which British crews started cannot be described as failure by any means. Only Australia, East and West Germany, the United States and Romania reached more grand finals. The frustrating aspect of the British results was that they included no top placings, two bronze medals where silver or gold had been expected, and four fourth places, all of which could, and three of which should, have been medals on

With the exception of Britain's youthful heavyweight all Britain's fourthplaced finishers must have been hoping for bronze medals at least. And the two crews which achieved bronze. Behind the failure of the British pair another question mark looms. When Berrisford was injured, was it the righ decision to draft one of Britain's outstanding oursmen to replace him? The re-location of Matthew Pinsent caused knock-on changes in both the coxless and coxed fours, and in the eight - precisely the three crews which ended up as fourth placers. If the pair had been dropped and Redgrave himself drafted into one of these crews, there could perhaps have been medals for two, if not three, more crews.

And by my book, a four-oar

Brace in the premier division

From DAVID POWELL ATHLETICS CORRESPONDENT NEW YORK

ALL THE statistics to emerge from the 21st New York Marathon on Sunday, one stood above the rest. Steve Brace, the Welshman who finished third in a field of 25,000, made it to what he division" in his 35th marathon. In his first, nine years ago, he ran 3hr 24min.
"Slower than my debut,"
Jacqueline, his wife, said.

Six weeks ago Brace limped out of an endurance stage race from Glasgow London before halfway. He missed six days training but came here still believing he might run a fast time. Ön a hot day, which produced the slowest men's winner for six years and the slowest women's champion for 12. Brace discovered that simply by sticking to his first halfmarathon schedule of 65 minutes he was in an elite leading group of four.

They included Douglas Wakiihuri, the world and Commonwealth champion, from Kenya, and Juma llcangaa, who has run under 2hr 09min six times.

Brace reached halfway one second inside schedule. "I was looking to come through - this was not a characteristic race for me," he said. "It was beginning to worry me. I have never thought myself to be anywhere near on a par with these guys. I have moved up from division two to the premier division."

Britain, though, will probably have to do without him the world championships in Tokyo next year. "I am not that keen to do them," Brace said. "I came into the sport for the big marathons and the championships don't really stimulate me. Anyway, i am a full-time athlete and the championships don't pay the

Though the point is arguable, Brace is probably Britain's No. 2 marathon runner of 1990. Allister Hutton's London victory gives him the strongest claim to No. 1, but Brace's wins in Paris and third here have the edge over the top-10 finishes of Geoff Wightman in the Commonwealth Games and European

Wakiihuri's victory here keeps open the debate over who is the world's best. Is it Gelindo Bordin, Boston and European champion, or Wakiiburi, Commonwealth and New York champion? How Chris Brasher, the race director, would like to have that issue decided in London next year. Though Bordin has signed. Wakiihuri probably will not and the head-to-head seems sure to be reserved for the world championships. If British marathon running was shown in a poor light in London by the gap between Hutton and the next domestic finisher, John Boyes in 32nd place in 2:16:03, that was nothing compared with the Ameri-cans here. In their biggest marathon, they had to wait for Gerry O'Hara, 29th in 2:26:15, In a bizaare scenario, race

SPORT FOR THE DISABLED

FA backs plan of action for football

By JANE WYATT

GRAHAM Taylor, the England football manager, has welcomed an 'imaginative scheme' from the Football Association designed to promote the game among people with disabilities. The Coca-Cola FA Preliminary Soccer Star Scheme, part of the FA's football-in-the-community programme, aims to increase participation in the national game by giving people the chance to develop their potential tial, whatever their ability.

It builds on an existing education and award initiative, known as the Soccer Star Scheme, by providing opportu-nities for improvement through a structured approach to learn-ing. The only difference is that in the preliminary scheme the assessment tagets have been amended to cater for people of all ages, both males and females. all ges. both maies and terrimes, whose sensory, or physical disability or mental bandicap would prevent them from enjoying the full challenges of the six grades in the original pro-

The FA' believes the new scheme is the first of its kind in the world. Although it hoped that people from every disability group will become involved, the organisation has taken the precaution of ascertaining the smability of football for some conditions. Recommendations conditions. Recommendations are that individuals with Downs syndrome should not head the ball, and anybody with a previous history of head injury, epilepsy, brittle bones or cateing deficiency should not alternate the tests without seeking medical advice.

The scheme will provide a recommend of football activities.

programme of football activities that should be easy to admin-ister, with reward and recog-nition in the form of badges and nition in the form of badges and certificates, for proficiency. Participants will have three stages of achievement, bronze, silver and gold, and those reaching gold will be recommended to try for a star rating in the conventional scheme.

In addition, the FA will be arranging courses for ecaches and leaders who will be teaching football techniques.

Women caught in gender trap

A SITUATION in which one sportswoman in 500 is suddenly allegedly not a woman is alarming sports medical as well as creating a devastating psychological trauma for the people themselves.

There have been 13 failures in 6,561 recent gender verification tests in performance-measured women's sporting events such as athletics and swimming. Dr Elizabeth Ferris, a former diving champion and medical officer for the Modern Penthalon Association, said: The shock to the woman is overwhelming. For the most part, they disappear from sport completely devastated, their careers cut off cruelly and abruptly.

The anxiety for administrators and competitors is that, in the highly complex sexual equation, of chromosomes + hormones + anatomy, which can be infinitely variable in individual detail, gender-testing is excluding more athletes unfairly than it is detecting those who cheat.

Caught in the net are genetic disorders that are not performance-advantageous: they are abberations within what might be termed an allowable range. Exceptionally tall men and women, for example, are not banned from being high jumpers or basketball players.

Dr Ferris collaborates on this issue with Professor Malcolm Ferguson-Smith, head of pathology at Cambridge University. At the annual congress of the General Assembly of International Sports Federations (GAISF) at Monte Carlo, she outlined their recommendation for altering gender-testing by organisations such as the International Olympic Committee and the International Amateur Athletic Federation, in order that it shall provide peace of mind and fairness tes. She was a case of male for all women competitors;

The complexity of the the Androgen Insensitivity physiological problems con-Syndrome of male chrofronting sportswomen was further emphasised to GAISF delegates - many of whom discourteously ignored the opportunity to gain imperative information about subsequently had a sexinherent development dan- change operation to become a gers among both adolescent man. by Professor Moira officers and administrators. O'Brien, professor of anatomy at Trinity College, Dublin, and medical officer to the Ireland Olympic team.

Professor O'Brien drew attention to the coincidence in highly trained girls and women, particularly in gymnastics, athletics and swimming, of amenorrhea (absence of menstruation), hormone-profile deficiencies and osteoporosis (brittle bones). The American College of Sports Medicine has shown that one-third of competitive female long-distance runners experience amenorrhea or oligomenorrhea (menstrual disturbance). In one recent case, a 23-year-old had an osetoporosis level of a woman of 70. Most of the medical controversies in women's sport arise out of ignorance, which is why it was shameful that the delegates of so many sports represented within GAISF missed an opportunity to learn. All sports competitors are, to a degree, compromised by the pressures placed upon them --some self-imposed, some induced by coaches or by the expectation of society — but women are, by their biology, more vulnerable than men.

The background to gender testing is factually bizarre. The need arose because of incidents before and after the second world war and a mounting suspicion in the Fifties and Sixties about some eastern European women with abnormal masculine characteristics.

Stella Walasiewicz, of Po land, the 1932 Olympic 100 metres winner, who was killed as a bystander in a shooting incident in America in 1980, was discovered on autopsy to have internal tespseudo hermaphroditism: fewhatever their sexual con-stitution. male external genitalis, in-ternal testes, probably having mosomes and female

Subsequently, the Buccal smear test of cells in the mouth was introduced and in use by 1972. This reveals the structure of the chromosome nucleus, with "normal" females having the XX characteristic and "normal" males XY. Yet it is possible to have XY "females" and XX "males" because of aberrations that take place at the critical differentiation phase of genitalia tissue at the fifth week of gestation. These unfortunate individuals then have external characteristics, by which doctors and their mothers identify them at birth, at variance with their chromatin/hormonal struc-

Those rare women who are XY, being anatomically female because they failed during gestation to respond normally to their testosterone density - and to become boys are termed Androgen Insensitive. RUGBY LEAGUE

NOBODY expected Malcolm Hulme of Widnes and Shaun Reilly, the Great Britain coach, to make changes after the stunningly unexpected victors over Australia, and true to his innate flowers for Great international series for Great sense of loyalty to those who have served him well. Reilly names the same squad of 17 for the second British Coal inter-national at Old Trafford on

The only changes are in the any glimpse of weakness is to travelling reserve positions, spotted in what are sure to be two travelling reserve positions, involving two players who have Wigan forward, Andy Platt, and the St Helens centre, Paul Loughlin. Both came successfully through their club matches

A surprise yet again is the exclusion of Jonathan Davies, who put in another useful Leeds, but who does not even get the reserve role which he vould have occupied for the first international but for his stepfather's illness. Another former regular in Rerlly's plans who has been unable to rejoin the party is the Wigan utility back, Joe Lydon.

It was obvious from the style and nature of Britain's victory over the Australians that Reilly would have difficulty justifying to himself any dramatic changes. He must have contemchanges. He must have contem-plated bringing back Loughlin or Lydon in the starting line-up as goal-kicking cover for Paul Eastwood, the Hull winger, who had an outstanding game and scored two tries at Wembley. TORG

DESERT Orehid, fast approaching his twelfth birthday, can show he is as good as ever by accounting for two talented rivals in a mouth-watering Plymouth Gin Haldon Gold Challenge Cup Chase at Devon and Exeter today.

Restricted to the first state of the state o While David Elsworth, his trainer, and Richard Burridge, the principal owner, have in the last week expressed confidence that the nation's equine idol has retained all his ability and enthusiasm, they have also stressed that a record fourth victory in the King George VI Rank Chase, more than seven weeks hence, is his primary objective for the first half of the season.

However, there is no doubt that Desert Orchid is the type of horse who comes to hand quickly after the summer recess and he has won on his reappearance in each of the last four seasons. In addition, today's grade two prize is

This dour stayer's last two runs can be safely ignored as he was partnered by an inexperienced lady amateur at Kelso last time and previously ran over fences.

Prior to that he had failed by half a length to concede 17lb at Perth to the useful Jaunty Gig, who completed a four-timer at Wetherby on Saturday. With the talented Paul Midgley, who rode him at Perth, taking 71b off his back, Change The Name has strong claims in this company.

RFU calls for rethink on amateurism regulations

By DAVID HANDS RUGBY CORRESPONDENT

THE Rugby Football Union (RFU) yesterday delivered a resounding slap in the face to the International Rugby Foot-ball Board (IRFB). Though couched in diplomatic language, the union - which is one of the eight senior mem-bers of the IRFB - has thrown back at the board the clause in the amateur regulations that would permit players to benefit directly from the game, by asking for it to be rescinded.

The RFU committee, which met last Friday to debate the October decision by the IRFB to liberalise the amateur regulations, was unanimous (with two abstentions) in expressing its "grave concern and disappointment at the IRFB's decision which it felt reasons for doing so, their Inevitably this would lead completely undermined the audience included represent to a contract which players

By a CORRESPONDENT

WOOLWICH Brixton Knights have the chance of breaking new ground for the English women's club game when they meet Sandnes, the Norwegian champions, in the second leg of the European Cup first round tie in Brixton on Saturday.

The English champions excelled on Sunday when they became the first English women's team to win a European Cup match on foreign soil defeating Sandnes 3-15, 15-11, 6-15, 15-10, 15-12 in Stavanger. By HENRY KELLY

IN WHAT could be con-strued as gross dereliction of duty to this column, on Sunday last at noon I forsook the comfort and safety of my own home to travel to White Hart Lane to watch Tottenham Hotspur play a version of soccer football and Liverpool play quite a different game on the same pitch at the same time.

Helped by the television set in the executive suite which kindly showed us Liverpool's goals again and again and again, we did indeed have an grammes and I couldn't find enjoyable afternoon, but we any trace of Bill Nicholson trudged away feeling sad and sorry for Spurs. Their manager, Mr Terence Venables, who is in the thrillers. In his day, Spurs club's official match programme advertising a game for all the family called Manager, said two of Liverpool's goals were offside. For last two weekends of sport on one of them, his players on the pitch were so convinced before the goal was scored that it would be offside, they simply looked at the referee. While they were doing that, a Mr Ian Rush was doing what he does best by lobbing the he does best by lobbing the Minutes later, Protestant ball into the net I suppose if Irishmen and Catholic Irish-beat Argentina at Lansdowne Road. Is it too sentimental to have found in those little gestures some metaphor from sport which could be passed into our lives? Then this past weekend I watched as an 18year-old Argentinian waltzed into a tall Englishman and laid him out cold.

Am I the only one who is getting fed up to the back teeth with what's happening on and off the field of a variety of sports? Managers moaning about referees; players thumping each other, socalled super-stars turning up here there and everywhere except where they are needed on the field of play.

In all this debate, television does us a good service because, far from putting referees and umpires under pressure, it helps to expose the frauds among sportsmen for what they are: cheats and second-rates. Incidentally, I have yet to hear a serious sports official, say Dickie Bird or George Courtenay, complain about television and mutter that it puts them under pressure. Men like that simply get on with it.

remembering the score from last week in Dublin, the result from Twickenham on Saturday was frightening. Since Ireland beat the Pumas by a lucky few points and England sneaked home 51 points to nil, this clearly means that Ireland will win this year's triple crown and grand slam! England were very impres-

Midway through Saturday afternoon at Twickers, the score from Nantes came through showing New Zealand 24, France 3. I have not, nor will I, pay attention to the political mutterines about the merger since I never yet met a government or opposition that had the best interest of broadcasting at heart. On sport and sporting matters, I will say this: if the variousbrains that exist in Sky and BSB get together without prejudice to provide one, unified top-class sports service, then they will wipe the floor with the more established sports coverage.

Gallacher offered his resignation to save Ryder Cup

By MITCHELL PLATTS GOLF CORRESPONDENT

BERNARD Gallacher yesterday revealed that he had offered his resignation as captain of Europe's next Ryder Cup team in an attempt to end the bitter dispute that still threatens the future of the biennial match against the United Gallacher, appointed successor to Tony Jacklin, made his dramatic disclosure on a day when Johnnie Walker announced a £4 million, four-year sponsorship package to include the matches at Kiawah Island, South Carolina, in 1991 and at The Belfry in 1993.

"I offered my resignation to one side in the hope that it might help to go ahead and to be played in the correct spirit," Gallacher said.

In fact, Gallacher's offer was not accepted, but the wrangle between the PGA European Tour and the Professional Golfers' Association continues. A contract between them on the organisation of the match has still to be signed. The PGA European Tour will advise their players that no tournament will carry Ryder Cup qualifying points until it has been. Ken Schofield, executive director of the PGA European Tour, was outraged that the PGA had inserted at the eleventh hour a clause limiting the agreement to grounds that it might help heat the 12 years and John Lindsey, the situation. I would certainly not PGA executive director, is equally have become captain if I had

being "deadlock" on any dispute that the Ryder Cup will be "killed" for four years.

Lindsey would like to go to arbitration. "I would suggest the secretary of the Royal and Ancient or the Lord Chief Justice," Lind-sey said. "The Tour has rejected using an independent figure although I still believe it would provide a sensible solution."

Gallacher, visibly emotional, said: "It's been the worst year of my life. Instead of enjoying the honeymoon period of being captain, it's been a nightmare. I offered my resignation on the known what was going to happen. It takes a sponsor like Johnnie And I do not believe any captain Walker and it takes players whom should ever be put through this kind of thing in the future.

"My captaincy has been seri-ously hampered and undermined by this festering problem. We simply want a joint venture between the PGA European Tour and the PGA. We want the TV rights, we want the PGA to have the first £750,000 of surplus and we want the remainder split on a

"That is the proposal the PGA had from us, and returned to us, but somewhere hetween 12.15 last Friday and 9.00 this morning the PGA has managed to concoct a that Neil Coles, who is due to chair 12-year limit. Well, it takes more the next Ryder Cup meeting at the than a Cup to make a Ryder Cup.

I've tried to shelter from this problem which, I might add, my predecessor, Tony Jacklin, did not have. It is a pity that I have not been able to settle down like Tony to become wholeheartedly involved in making the arrange-ments which will best help us retain the Cup.

Schofield was given a clear mandate by his players at a meeting on September 4 to act in their best interest and unless the PGA has a change of heart regarding their demand for a 12year limit then it is understood end of the month, will not attend.

I understand that the PGA European Tour has consistently out forward a written proposal based on agreement reached around the table but that the PGA has consistently found reason to change the proposal. Lindsey stressed that he felt the solf supporter deserved an answer. "I hope he has one soon," Lindsey

There can be little doubt, too. that Johnnie Walker will want an answer. If no agreement is reached and the top European golfers elect not to compete then Johnnie Walker could withdraw from the contract. Ian Ross, the chairman of John Walker and Sons Ltd, is confident that all will be well.

Royle a firmer favourite than ever for Everton

establish Everton as a powerexpected to be named

Although the Merseyside club is still refusing to discuss the names of those managers who have applied for the post made vacant by the dismissal, last week, of Colin Harvey, the appointment of Joe Royle, who is in charge at Oldham Athletic, is considered likely.

"In the interests of all concerned we expect to make our first official statement within the next 48 hours." Jim Greenwood, the chief executive of Everton, said yesterday. The Everton board of directors will meet at Goodison Park this afternoon to discuss the matter following the return home of Desmond Pitcher, the vice-chairman, who has been abroad on

Although Royle has refused to comment on the possibility of a return to the club with which he spent nine years as a player, the uncommon speed with which Everton will secure a replacement for Harvey does suggest that his position as the bookmakers' favourite for the job is not false.

Royle, who last season turned down the chance to succeed Mel Machin as the manager of Manchester City, is believed to have an oral eement with Ian Stott, the Oldham chairman, which would release him from his contract at Boundary Park to assume control at a "leading first division club".

The appointment of anybody other than Royle would be a surprise, even though several leading managers are believed to have made contact with Everton following the official advertising of the post at the weekend.

Royle's chief rival was Ron

THE man chosen to help re- Sheffield Wednesday, but he has already announced his ful force in English football is intention of signing a contract that will keep him at the South Yorkshire club until 1993.

If Royle is given the job, he is likely to seek permission to appoint, as his successor, Willie Donachie, who presently occupies a similar position at Oldham.

Other managers who have been under consideration include Bruce Rioch, of Millwall, Alan Ball, of Stoke City, Arthur Cox, of Derby County. and Martin Dobson, the former Everion player who resigned as the manager of Bury last year. Bryan Robson, the captain of Manchester United, was also thought to be interested in considered suitable because of his complete lack of managerial experience.

Ivanisevic likely to Probyn lifts curtain on riddles of gain from Becker By Andrew Longmore, tennis correspondent

FATE seems to have decided served at the end of a fraught that, one way or another, the names of Boris Becker and Goran Ivanisevic should be linked together for the year. The young Yugoslav, aged 19. who beat Becker in the first round of the French Open in May but lost to him in the semi-finals at Wimbledon, has two chances to cap his extraordinary rise by winning one of the eight places in the $2 million ATP Tour world next week. The first depends on his performance in the $330,000 Diet Pepsi Indoor Challenge at Wembley this week; the second on the speed of Becker's recovery from the thigh injury which limited his part in the final of the Paris Open against Stefan Edberg on Sunday to just six games. Ivanisevic, the No. 2 seed, has to reach the final at least at Wembley to be in with a chance of overtaking Emilio Sanchez, who plays in the Kremlin Cup in Moscow this week, and sneaking into the last place in the eight-man ATP finals. He does not have the easiest start against Thierry Champion, of France, who reached the quarter-finals of the French Open in May. The sadder but possibly more realistic prospect is that Becker will be forced to pull out of the finals, letting Ivanisevic in through the back door. That would not only be cruel luck on the world champion, who would have reached No. 1 early next week if he had beaten Edberg in Paris. but on the ATP, who were overjoyed that the No. 1 position would be decided by their own finals, where rank- struggled to regain the form ing points are being awarded and confidence he showed at for the first time. of punches are trademar front-row hostilities. Pascal Ondarts, a particularly fiery Frenchman, reacted predictably after Probyn had helped win four tight heads in the 1988 France-England match in Paris. "We expected that winning four of them was superb. But we still lost the match 10-9."

Probyn defines his chief tasks as two-fold: keeping the scrum stable on his own side's feed and, when the opposition have the put-in, physically attacking (by legal methods) the opposing hooker to split the opposition's scrummage. Some of the props I play against happily slip around the outside of me and look comfortable. But their hooker is taking all the pressure from me. The best opponent is the one who scrummages straight against you all the time, thereby preventing you getting Fingers poked into the eyes at his hooker. It is all about Probyn to face committee

Most referees immediately go round to the opposite side of the scrum to try to pinpoint the culprit. Then, when the ball is inserted on the opposite side, the feed is usually crooked for it is impossible for a referee on the tight-head to see exactly where it was fed.

Probyn, with a perfeculy straight face, says that much of what goes on is "open to interpretation". Deciding where the pressure is being exerted and therefore who is to blame for scrummage collapses is especially tricky. What goes on is an intense physical and mental battle.
